Terri A. Mazur is an experienced trial lawyer who focuses her practice on federal securities litigation and regulatory investigations, primarily in the financial services industry, antitrust, defense of financial institutions in the consumer financial services industry, and complex commercial disputes. She represents corporate clients, financial institutions, accounting firms, officers and directors in complex individual, class and multidistrict litigation involving securities fraud, lending, leasing, credit reporting and practices, breach of contract and fiduciary duty, professional responsibility and fraud claims. She also represents national and multinational corporations in the chemical, energy, airline and other industries in monopoly, cartel, price fixing, market allocation and conspiracy cases.

Terri has tried numerous cases, including bench and jury trials, and evidentiary hearings for injunctive and emergency relief, in federal and state courts across the country. She has written numerous appellate briefs and argued before the Courts of Appeals for the Third, Seventh, Ninth and Tenth Circuits, as well as in state appellate courts.

She also frequently speaks and writes on securities and antitrust issues, as well as on issues affecting women lawyers.
