I. Introduction

In November 2005, New York State Bar Association President A. Vincent Buzard appointed a Special Task Force on Eminent Domain to provide legal analysis and recommendations about appropriate legislative and regulatory considerations in the practice of eminent domain law, in the aftermath of the much-publicized U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Kelo v. City of New London, 125 S.Ct. 2655 (2005) (a list of Task Force members is attached as Appendix A). After its first four meetings to review research on eminent domain laws in New York and to evaluate state and local legislative proposals introduced after the Kelo decision, the Task Force issued an interim report in March 2006 that contained: a description of the Kelo decision and an analysis of the “public use” requirement for purposes of the use of eminent domain under both the federal and New York State Constitutions; a discussion of post-Kelo legislative reactions at both the state and local levels in New York; and a series of recommendations, including the need to create a Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain Reform in New York and potential items for study by such a Commission. (The full Interim Report is attached as Appendix B.) The report also contained a brief review of the prior state-initiated eminent domain reform effort almost 30 years ago, and demonstrated how little attention has been focused on the important issues embedded in the use of eminent domain. The eight initial recommendations are:

- The use of eminent domain should not be restricted to specified public projects.
- Local governments should not have a veto over exercises of eminent domain by public authorities of larger entities within their borders.
- Agencies exercising eminent domain for economic development purposes should be required to prepare a comprehensive economic development plan and a property owner impact assessment.
- The present 30-day statute of limitations in Eminent Domain Procedure Law (EDPL) § 207 for judicial review of the condemnor’s determination and findings should be expanded.

- A new public hearing under EDPL § 201 should be required where there has been substantial change in the scope of a proposed economic development project involving the exercise of eminent domain.
- No exceptions to the EDPL are necessary for acquiring property for public utility purposes.
- Acquisitions should not be exempted from the EDPL’s eminent domain procedures simply because other statutes provide for land-use review.
- A Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain should be established.

The Task Force’s Interim Report was presented to the New York State Bar Association House of Delegates and approved on April 1, 2006. As a result of this action, the New York State Bar Association was able to issue letters to members of the New York Congressional Delegation about a proposed federal bill that would have had devastating effects on the ability of New York’s governmental entities to exercise the power of eminent domain (the letters are attached as Appendix C), and Memoranda in Opposition to a legislative proposal in New York that also would have had perhaps unintended consequences (attached as Appendix D). Although two eminent domain bills were enacted in New York during the 2006 Legislative Session, they were both narrow laws addressing specific situations (e.g., one dealt with a country club on Long Island and the other with a powerline) and the NYSBA did not comment on these two proposals.

On the eve of the 30th Anniversary of the EDPL in New York, the Interim Report focused attention on the need to recodify or modernize this law, in part recognizing that the vast majority of its provisions remain in its original form. In addition to calling for such an effort to be initiated by the state, the Task Force developed an ambitious agenda that included hosting a day-long invitational summit on October 24, 2006 to begin to examine the feasibility of developing a comprehensive EDPL Reform Agenda.
The results of the Summit, discussed in greater detail in Section II, provide the basis for the additional recommendations contained in this Final Report.

In 2006, approximately 600 bills were introduced in 43 states, although fewer than 100 bills actually made it to a vote in at least one chamber of a statehouse. Legislatures in 23 states passed 35 pieces of legislation that have been signed into law by their state governors, with governors in three states vetoing proposals perceived to be unduly restrictive. The new laws, or amendments to existing condemnation laws, include some constitutional amendments. The newly enacted laws can generally be organized into seven major categories:

- Proposals that prohibit the use of eminent domain for economic development purposes, including for the purpose of generating tax revenue, and legislation that prohibits the transfer of private property to another public entity.
- Proposals that define the phrase “public use.”
- Efforts to restrict the exercise of eminent domain to blighted properties, including defining or redefining what constitutes blight.
- Laws to strengthen the procedural aspects of condemnation proceedings, including the provision of greater public notice, more public hearings, requirements for good-faith negotiations with property owners and approval by elected legislative bodies of all proposed condemnations.
- Efforts to define “just compensation” as something greater than fair-market value where the property to be condemned is a principal residence.
- Enactment of moratoria on the use of eminent domain for economic development purposes.
- Establishment of legislative study commissions or task forces to study and report back to the legislature with findings and/or recommendations.

Even within each of these seven broad categories, states have enacted legislative initiatives designed to address unique issues and concerns of various interest groups in their respective jurisdictions. In the area of just compensation, a number of new approaches were adopted, including increased compensation depending upon the underlying purpose of the condemnation, whether a home is involved in the condemnation, and how long the property has been in the possession by the same family.

Another policy area attracting national legislative attention is the ability of landowners whose property has been condemned to repurchase it from the government at a later date if the government never uses the land for the intended purpose when it was condemned. With roughly three dozen new laws on the books across the country, a wide range of options have been developed to evaluate potential reforms. A more detailed description of these legislative proposals is contained in Appendix E (from which this description was excerpted).

II. Summit on Eminent Domain Reform

On October 24, 2006, the Task Force on Eminent Domain hosted a statewide Summit at the Bar Center in Albany, New York. The purpose of the Summit was to bring together attorney stakeholders from across New York who represented, in various capacities, both condemnors and condemnees in order to identify emerging areas of consensus on needed EDPL reform initiatives. A list of participants is attached as Appendix F and a copy of the Summit agenda is attached as Appendix G. The Task Force retained the Land Use Law Center of Pace University School of Law to provide facilitating and reporting services for the Summit. During the Summit, participants were asked to discuss the pros and cons, benefits and drawbacks, and nuanced wording of potential reform initiatives in the following areas: Notice Provisions; Filing Claims; Title Issues; Expediting Review; Compensation; Appropriate Rate of Interest; Advance Payment; Pre-vesting and Post-vesting Fixture Claims; Uniformity for Filing of Claims; Expansion of Pretrial Discovery; Expert Witness Reports—Discoverability; and Staffing Issues for Condemning Agencies.

It was apparent through discussion at the Summit, that in New York there is great diversity of circumstances in condemnations at the state and non-state level, among localities of various sizes, and when initiated by quasi-public bodies. In addition, reforms must respect the tension between furthering the public benefits of condemnations by avoiding cost and complexity while ensuring that the rights and interests of condemnees are respected. Mindful that reform of the EDPL must proceed with care, after thoughtful deliberation, the Task Force makes the following five additional recommendations (to be listed after the initial eight proposed in the March 2006 Interim Report) where the use of the power of eminent domain is contemplated by a local government or another public authority for the purpose of redevelopment of an area within the municipality or for the purpose of conducting an economic development project:

9. The condemning authority, in the findings it is required to make under the Eminent Domain Procedures Law, must state the full range of anticipated benefits that are to be secured for the public, how those benefits are to be achieved, and what steps are necessary to ensure that the area-wide redevelopment or economic development program will be carried out as envisioned.

10. The condemning authority must also outline the anticipated adverse impacts of the proposed area-wide redevelopment plan or economic development project on all property owners and tenants to be affected by the project and the means by which those adverse impacts are to be mitigated.

11. Where the public property to be acquired is in turn conveyed to a private redeveloper, the condemning authority must set forth in the required findings the process it plans to follow to select that redeveloper, the basis for the selection of the redeveloper, the benefits that will accrue to that redeveloper, and the extent to which the public is informed and involved in the process of selecting the redeveloper. The findings must include a statement of the means that will be used to monitor the activities of the redeveloper and to ensure that the redeveloper’s primary purpose is to secure the public benefits of the redevelopment or the project.

12. The private redeveloper should be precluded from direct contact with the proposed claimant from the time the condemning authority issues its final determination and findings pursuant to EDPL Art. 2.
13. The due process rights of all owners of land or buildings to be condemned must be guaranteed. The condemning authority must set forth all reasonable means that will be employed to provide notice to prospective condemnees of the public hearing, as required under Section 202 of the Eminent Domain Procedures Law.

III. Other Activities Since the Interim Report

In addition to the Summit, the Task Force on Eminent Domain collaborated with a number of NYSBA Sections and Committees to promote further dialogue and education on the subject of eminent domain in New York. Together with the Real Property Law Section and the Committee on Attorneys in Public Service, the Task Force sponsored a half-day CLE program during the NYSBA Annual Meeting in January 2007 (The agenda is attached as Appendix H.). This well-attended program featured Task Force members and leading eminent domain practitioners in the public and private sectors. The Municipal Law Section reprinted the entire Interim Report of the Task Force in the Summer 2006 issue of its publication, the Municipal Lawyer. In the Spring of 2007, the Committee on Attorneys in Public Service devoted an issue of the Government Law &
Policy Journal to the subject of eminent domain, and two Task Force members, Jon Santemma and David Wilkes, served as guest co-editors. A number of Task Force members contributed substantive articles. (The Table of Contents is attached as Appendix I.)

IV. Conclusion

The New York State Bar Association took a leadership role in responding to public demands for a re-examination of state and local eminent domain laws and procedures. The only organized bar association to convene a Task Force, the NYSBA provided a unique opportunity for thoughtful leadership that yielded a series of thirteen reform initiatives supported by lawyers who represent diverse stakeholder interests in the eminent domain arena. The recommended reforms will ensure a more fair environment when governments appropriately exercise the power of eminent domain for redevelopment and economic development purposes.

Executive Summary

In November 2005, New York State Bar Association President A. Vincent Buzard appointed a Special Task Force on Eminent Domain to provide legal analysis and recommendations about appropriate legislative and regulatory considerations in the practice of eminent domain law in the aftermath of the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Kelo v. City of New London, 125 S.Ct. 2655 (2005). The Task Force met four times to review research on eminent domain laws in New York and to evaluate state and local legislative proposals introduced in the aftermath of the Kelo decision.

Part II of this report contains a description of the Kelo decision and an analysis of the “public use” requirement for purposes of the use of eminent domain under both the federal and New York State Constitutions. In Part III, post-Kelo legislative reactions are discussed at both the state and local levels in New York.

Among the Task Force recommendations is the need to create a Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain Reform in New York. In Section IV of this report, the Task Force identifies a list of potential items for study by such a Commission. Part V contains a brief review of the prior state-initiated eminent domain reform effort almost thirty years ago, and demonstrates how little attention has been focused on the important issues embedded in the use of eminent domain.

The Task Force recommendations are set forth in Section VI of this report. In developing this particular list of recommendations, the Task Force focused almost exclusively on the seventeen proposed bills in the State Legislature. In no particular order of priority, the task force recommends (with more explanation in the report) the following:

- The use of eminent domain should not be restricted to specified public projects.
- Local governments should not have a veto over exercises of eminent domain by public authorities of larger entities within their borders.
- Agencies exercising eminent domain for economic development purposes should be required to prepare a comprehensive economic development plan and a property owner impact assessment.
- The present 30-day statute of limitations in EDPL § 207 for judicial review of the condemnor’s determination and findings should be expanded.

- A new public hearing under EDPL § 201 should be required where there has been substantial change in the scope of a proposed economic development project involving the exercise of eminent domain.
- No exceptions to the EDPL are necessary for acquiring property for public utility purposes.
- Acquisitions should not be exempted from the EDPL’s eminent domain procedures simply because other statutes provide for land-use review.
- A Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain should be established.

The Task Force believes there is still more work to be done. The Task Force has presented this report with the offer to President Buzard that its members are willing to continue to discuss and debate significant constitutional, jurisdictional and other legal aspects of eminent domain reform in New York. The Task Force urges the Executive Committee and the House of Delegates of the New York State Bar Association to adopt the eight specific recommendations contained in this report and to direct the Government Relations staff of the Bar Association to communicate these recommendations to the New York State Legislature.
I. Introduction

In November 2005, New York State Bar Association President A. Vincent Buzard appointed a Special Task Force on Eminent Domain to provide legal analysis and recommendations about appropriate legislative and regulatory considerations in the practice of eminent domain law in the aftermath of the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Kelo v. City of New London, 125 S.Ct. 2655 (2005), which held that economic development is a valid public use for purposes of eminent domain.

A. Mission Statement

The mission statement of the Task Force is as follows:

The mission and objective of the New York State Bar Association’s Task Force on Eminent Domain is to review existing and proposed legislation regarding eminent domain in New York and make recommendations regarding appropriate legislative and regulatory considerations. This Task Force will work to shed light on the real issues while removing some of the hyperbole from the debate process and, above all, stop the blaming of judges for simply ruling on the law to the best of their abilities.

B. Members of the Task Force

The Task Force is comprised of lawyers and law professors who practice in the public, private and non-profit sectors. Lawyers on the Task Force represent both public and private clients, developers and property owners. In addition, the Task Force includes members active in the following NYSBA Sections/Committees: Environmental Law, Municipal Law, Real Property Law, and the Committee on Attorneys in Public Service. To date, the Task Force has met four times, once each in November, December, January and March for the purpose of reviewing the current state of the law in New York, analyzing existing federal, state and local legislative proposals introduced following the Supreme Court ruling, examining the need for reform in all areas of the Eminent Domain Procedure Law and the Urban Development Corporation Law, and exploring the impact of eminent domain reform at the local government level. The Task Force considered, among other things, federal and state constitutional implications of reform proposals, and issues of fairness and access to administrative and/or judicial review of eminent domain actions.

The Task Force is chaired by Patricia Salkin, Associate Dean and Director of the Government Law Center of Albany Law School. Task Force members are:

• John M. Armentano of Uniondale (Farrell Fritz, P.C.)
• Professor Vicki Been, NYU School of Law
• Lisa Bova-Hiatt of New York (New York City Corporation Counsel’s Office)
• Kevin Crawford of Albany (Association of Towns)
• Hon. John D. Doyle of Rochester
• Robert A. Feldman of Rochester (Ward Norris Heller & Reidy LLP)
• M. Robert Goldstein of New York (Goldstein, Goldstein, Rikon & Gottlieb, P.C.)
• Charlene M. Indelicato of White Plains (Westchester County Attorney)
• Linda S. Kingsley of Rochester
• Robert B. Koegel of Rochester (Remington, Gifford, Williams & Colicchio, LLP)
• Harry G. Meyer of Buffalo (Hodgson Russ LLP)
• Professor John R. Nolon of White Plains (Pace University School of Law)
• Richard L. O’Rourke of White Plains (Keane & Beane, P.C.)
• James T. Potter of Albany (Hinman Straub, P.C.)
• Carl Rosenbloom of Albany (Bond Schoeneck & King)
• Joel H. Sachs of White Plains (Keane & Beane, P.C.)
• Jon N. Santemma of Garden City (Jaspan Schlesinger & Hoffman LLP)
• William L. Sharp of Glenmont (New York State Department of State)
• Lester D. Steinman of White Plains (Municipal Law Resource Center, Pace University)
• Prof. Philip Weinberg of Jamaica (St. John’s University School of Law)
• David C. Wilkes of Tarrytown (Huff Wilkes, LLP)
Hon. Joel K. Asarch is the NYSBA Executive Committee Liaison to the Task Force.

The Task Force appreciates the outstanding NYSBA staff support provided by Mark Wilson, Glenn Lefebvre, and Ronald Kennedy.
II. Background

A. Kelo v. City of New London

Under the Fifth Amendment’s Taking Clause, private property may not be taken for “public use” without just compensation. May private property be taken for the “public purpose” of economic development?

Resisting decades of economic decline, respondent City of New London, Connecticut embarked upon an ambitious, integrated development plan to build commercial, residential, and recreational facilities in an area where petitioners Kelo and others just happened to live. While the stated purpose of the project was to create jobs, increase tax revenues, and revitalize the economy, the project site would be leased to a private developer and adjoin land to be used by a large pharmaceutical company as a research center. When negotiations to purchase petitioners’ non-blighted homes stalled, the City, through its non-profit development corporation, commenced condemnation proceedings. Petitioners sued, not arguing that the compensation they were offered was unjust, but rather that economic development is not a “public use” for which their property may be taken.

By a 5-4 decision, the Supreme Court upheld the condemnation of petitioners’ properties. Writing for the majority, Justice Stevens, joined by Justices Kennedy, Souter, Ginsberg and Breyer, found that the Supreme Court had long ago abandoned the literal requirement that condemned property be put to “public use” and instead accepted the view that the evolving needs of society demand a broader interpretation of “public use” so as to mean “public purpose.” Relying primarily on Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26 (1954) (upholding condemnation of properties in Washington, D.C. in part for private development in a blighted area) and Hawaii Housing Authority v. Midkiff, 467 U.S. 229 (1984) (upholding forced transfer of title from lessors to lessees to reduce land oligopoly in Hawaii), the majority found that there was no reason to exempt economic development from the traditionally broad understanding of public purpose.

The majority considered petitioners’ contention that using eminent domain for economic development blurs the boundary between permissible public takings and impermissible private takings, acknowledging that the government’s pursuit of a public purpose will often benefit individual private parties. Nevertheless, the majority found that a public purpose may be better served through private enterprise than public ownership, or that public ownership is not the only method of promoting the public purpose of community redevelopment projects. The majority also weighed petitioners’ argument that without a bright-line rule, nothing would stop the government from taking one private person’s property and handing it to another private person on the sole speculation that the latter will use the property more productively than the former and thus pay more taxes. The majority rejected this concern, noting that one-to-one transfers of property apart from an integrated development plan can be challenged if and when they arise.

The majority also reflected on petitioners’ view that if economic development takings are to be allowed, courts should require with “reasonable certainty” that the expected public benefits will actually accrue. Again, the majority dismissed this approach, explaining that courts must not substitute their predictive discretion for that of elected legislatures and expert agencies and that the court’s role is limited to determining whether the legislature could have rationally believed that a taking could promote a legitimate public purpose.

Finally, the majority expressed sympathy for the hardship that condemnations may entail, but emphasized that nothing in its opinion would prevent any state from placing further restrictions on the exercise of eminent domain, as many states already have. The majority simply reiterated that the proposed condemnation of petitioners’ property in this case is for a “public use” within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment.

In his concurring opinion, Justice Kennedy agreed with the majority that a taking is constitutional so long as it is rationally related to a conceivable public purpose, but noted that when applying this rational basis review, a court should review the record and strike down any taking that is intended to favor a particular private party with only incidental or pretextural public benefits. Justice Kennedy found that the trial court determined that substantial public funds were committed by the state to the development project before most of the project beneficiaries where known, that the private developer was chosen from a group of applicants instead of being selected beforehand, that the pharmaceutical company’s proximity to the site benefited the project, and that all lower court justices agreed that the development plan was intended to revitalize the local economy and not to serve the interests of any particular private party. Under these circumstances, Justice Kennedy found that the taking survived rational basis review, and that a more stringent standard of review to detect impermissible favoritism was unnecessary. Justice Kennedy also rejected petitioners’ argument that economic development takings should be treated by the courts as per se invalid, noting that such a rule would prohibit a large number of government takings that have the purpose and expected effect of conferring substantial benefits on the public at large.

Justice O’Connor, joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia and Thomas, authored a dissenting opinion. Justice O’Connor observed that the following three categories of takings comply with the public use requirement: first, when private property is transferred to public ownership, such as for a road, hospital, or a military base; second, when private property is transferred to private parties, often common carriers, who make the property available for the public’s use, such as with a railroad, a public utility, or a stadium; and third, when private property is transferred for subsequent private use to meet “certain exigencies,” such as to ameliorate blighted housing in Berman or to mitigate the housing oligopoly in Midkiff. The economic development taking in this case, Justice O’Connor reasoned, does not address any such exigencies and instead allows the government to take private property currently put to ordinary private use and give it over for new ordinary private use, so long as the new use is predicted to generate some secondary public benefit.

Contrary to the view of the majority and Justice Kennedy that courts have a role in ferreting out takings designed to solely benefit private transferees, Justice O’Connor opined that it is difficult to disentangle the private and public benefits of an economic development taking, and even if it could be done, the majority concedes that courts are not supposed to get bogged down in predicting whether or not the public will actually be better off after a property transfer. Indeed, Justice O’Connor reasoned, if the economic development taking in this case was upheld because it involved a careful, deliberative process, an integrated development plan rather than an isolated property transfer and projected incidental public benefits, there is nothing in the analysis by the majority or Justice Kennedy to prohibit property transfers generated with less care, less comprehensive planning, less elaborate process, and less clear incidental public benefits. In the end, Justice O'Connor portended, while economic development takings jeopardize the security of all private property ownership, it will be those with the fewest resources who will be the greatest victims of such takings.

Justice Thomas also penned a dissenting opinion. Relying on historic dictionaries, the Constitution’s common law background, and disparate phrases from the Constitution, Justice Thomas concluded that the “public use” requirement means that the government can take private property only if the government will own, or the public will have a legal right to use, the property, as opposed to taking the property for any public purpose or necessity whatsoever. Justice Thomas maintained that early American eminent domain practice is generally consistent with this understanding of “public use,” and that the “public purpose” interpretation of the “public use” clause needlessly crept into more modern jurisprudence as many of the cases adopting the “public purpose” test involved property which was, in fact, transferred for the use of the public, if not for outright public ownership.

Rejecting both Berman and Midkiff for equating the eminent domain power with the police power of the states, Justice Thomas concluded that the “public purpose” test cannot be applied in a principled manner. He shared Justice O'Connor’s skepticism about a public use standard that requires courts to second guess the wisdom of public works projects. Responding to the majority’s criticism that the “public use” test is difficult to administer, Justice Thomas asserted that it is far easier to ask whether the government owns or the public has the legal right to use the taken property than to ask whether the taking has a purely private purpose. Citing examples of how the exercise of eminent domain through urban renewal programs disproportionately hurt poor and minority communities, Justice Thomas, like Justice O’Connor, promised that the consequences of the majority’s decision would be harmful.
B. Defining Public Use

1. A Review of U.S. Constitutional Analysis

To fully understand the state of the law as to what may be condemned in New York State, the nature of the power of eminent domain as well as the history of the eminent domain provisions of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is critical. What follows is an overview of the law.

Starting with the nature of the power, it was stated in People v. Adirondack R. Co., 160 N.Y. 225, 54 NE 689, aff'd, 176 U.S. 335:

The power of taxation, the police power and the power of eminent domain, underlie the Constitution and rest upon necessity, because there can be no effective government without them. They are not conferred by the Constitution, but exist because the state exists, and they are essential to its existence. They are not rights reserved, but rights inherent in the state as sovereign. While they may be limited and regulated by the Constitution, they exist independently of it as a necessary attribute of sovereignty. They belong to the state because it is sovereign, and they are a necessity of government. The state cannot surrender them, because it cannot surrender a sovereign power. It cannot be a state without them. They are as enduring and indestructible as the state itself. (Black Cons. Law, § 123; Cooley Const. Lim. 524; Eminent Domain by Randolph, 77; Lewis, § 3; Mills, § 11.) Each is a peculiar power, wholly independent of the others, and not one of them requires the intervention of a court for effective action by the state. In the case of eminent domain, when the state is not itself an actor, compensation for property taken, unless the amount is agreed upon, can be ascertained only through the aid of a court, but otherwise judicial action is unnecessary except as provided by statute.
(State Const. Article 1, § 7.) While the state may delegate the power to a subject for a public use, it cannot permanently part with it as to any property under its jurisdiction, but may resume it at will, subject to property rights and the duty of paying therefor. There is no limitation upon the exercise of the power except that the use must be public, compensation must be made and due process of law observed. (Secombe v. RR Co., 90 U.S. 108; Matter of Fowler, 53 N.Y. 60, 62).

The power is exercised legislatively either directly or by delegation of power through legislation (i.e., statutes, charters, etc.). See Cuglar v. Power Auth. of N.Y., 4 Misc.2d 879, 163 N.Y.S.2d 801, 164 N.Y.S.2d 686, aff’d, 3 N.Y.2d 1006, 170 N.Y.S.2d 341; County of Orange v. MTA, 71 Misc.2d 691, 337 N.Y.S.2d 178, 188–89, aff’d, 39 A.D.2d 839, 332 N.Y.S.2d 420 (2d Dep’t, 1972).

Thus, the State of New York and the federal government each independently have that power. The Fifth Amendment does not grant the power, it restricts it. The question then is, in what way? It provides for “just compensation,” but is the “public use” language also a restriction, and if it is, does it have a literal reading?

The power existed prior to both the Constitution and the Fifth Amendment, the latter being adopted in 1791. The Fifth Amendment did not apply to the states prior to 1897 when it was decided it applied via the 14th Amendment Due Process Clause (Chicago B&Q Rail Road v. Chicago, 166 U.S. 226, 239). Since the very first use of the federal power of eminent domain did not occur until 1872 (see Kohl v. U.S., 91 U.S. 367, 373 (1876)) there are very few decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court interpreting the “public use” provision of the Fifth Amendment prior to the 20th century.

However, the specific language of the Fifth Amendment raises interesting questions as to the meaning of the phrase. The specific language which is virtually the same in the New York State Constitution, Article 1, § 7 is “…nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation…” What it does not say is, “unless for public use.” Some question why it was not so written if the intention was to make “public use” a restriction.
In 1797, in Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386, in dicta, there is discussion of the nature of the power (as well as the police power and the power of taxation) and its limitations. In applying general principles of law, applicable with or without a constitutional provision, and stated as grounded in the “social compact,” the Court said that “a law that takes property from A and gives it to B” was invalid. Noteworthy is that this discussion relied not on any constitutional provision or the Fifth Amendment, which had been adopted only a short time before, but on generally accepted principles of law. This specific language found its way into Kelo v. City of New London, 125 S.Ct. 2655 (2005), without any attribution of where it came from, it having been repeated in other cases over the years. Thus, it was early recognized that it was not any constitutional provision which prohibited such a taking, but “the general principles of law and reason (which) forbid them.”

One assumption as to why the language of the Fifth Amendment was written as it was in omitting the word “unless” for public use is that the restriction already existed. You could not take property from A and give it to B, without more. It was not written as a restriction on the purposes for which the power of eminent domain could be exercised, but rather a requirement that when it was exercised for a public use, there must be just compensation. It was a just compensation clause, not a public use clause. It was not until Hawaii Housing Authority v. Midkiff, 467 U.S. 229 (1984), that for the first time the Supreme Court made a direct connection between the “public use” language of the Fifth Amendment and how the right of eminent domain could be exercised. If the language of the Fifth Amendment prior to Midkiff was not a restriction limiting a taking to a “public use” and general principles of law prohibited the taking of the property of A and giving to B, what short of that was the limitation on the purposes for which the power could be exercised under general principles of law and reason?

Since a basic power of any sovereign included, besides the power of eminent domain, the taxing power and the police power as attributes of sovereignty, it appears that the earliest limits for the power must have been the same source of the police power, the health, safety and welfare of the public.

This connection was recognized and spelled out in Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26 (1954). While some may have deemed this a revolutionary concept, to other scholars it appeared to be a repetition of a common understanding of the law at the time of the drafting of the U.S. Constitution. Justice O’Connor, in Midkiff, cited Berman v. Parker extensively, with approval.

Long before Berman v. Parker, many cases had equated “public use” with “public purpose” or “public benefit.” Private property could be taken from A and given to B if there were a public purpose or benefit. Thus, early on, there were condemnations for privately owned mill dams, canals, railroads, toll roads, electric transmission and other utility lines, and the like. While they served the public, it was still the taking of property from A to give to B. While it took many years to recognize the curing of the social ills connected with “slums” as a public purpose, or benefitting a locality by providing jobs and increasing the tax base, both on a national level and in New York, the genesis was the police power, the public health, safety and welfare.

2. Analysis Under the New York State Constitution

While these cases were taking place on the national level, New York State had its own body of case law on the subject.

In 1936, in Matter of New York City Housing Authority v. Muller, 270 N.Y. 333, the Court of Appeals said, in the context of approving what was then called “slum clearance” of a blighted area: “use of a proposed structure, facility or service by everybody and anybody is one of the abandoned universal tests of public use.” The Court then went on, setting the stage for the decisions to come to the present time, when it said: “over many years and in a multitude of cases, the courts have vainly attempted to define comprehensively the concept of a public use and to formulate a universal test. They have found here, as elsewhere, that to formulate anything ultimate, even though it were possible, would in an inevitably changing world be unwise, if not futile. Lacking a controlling precedent, we deal with the question as it presents itself on the facts at the present point of time. The law of each age is ultimately what that age thinks should be law.” The Court went on to say that elimination of slums is a matter of state concern and that elimination of the conditions found in the slums “is a public purpose.” The Court spoke not of “public use,” but of “public purpose.” The door was opened by this case in New York. This opinion was rendered well before the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Berman v. Parker, supra.

Did that mean that only “slum” buildings could be condemned? The Court answered that in Kaskel v. Impelliteri, 306 N.Y. 73 (1953) when the Court said the test was not as to a particular building but an entire area. But the Court went a step further, with portents for the future. The Court, after noting that no corruption or fraud was charged and that the purpose was not illegal, declared it would not look behind the statement of purpose by the legislative body and then stated: “One can conceive of an hypothetical case where the physical conditions of an area might be such that it would be irrational or baseless to call it substandard or unsanitary, in which case, probably the conditions for the exercise of the power could not be present. However, the situation here actually displayed is one of those as to which the legislature has authorized the City officials including elected officials, to make a determination, and so the making thereof is simply an act of government, that is an exercise of governmental power, legislative in fundamental character which, whether wise or unwise cannot be overhauled by the Courts. If the Courts below should decide in favor of plaintiff there would be effected a transfer of power from the appropriate public officials to the Courts. The question is simply not a ‘justiciable one.’”

That had been preceded in 1940 by Bush Terminal Co. v. City of New York, 282 N.Y. 317 and later in 1963 by Courtesy Sandwich Shop, Inc. v. Port of New York Authority, 12 N.Y.2d 379. In both cases the Court approved a much larger improvement than that needed to satisfy the basic need for the stated purpose of the project, on the basis that the revenue generated by the additional space would make the project economically feasible and thus that space was only incidental to the main purpose of each project. However, the latter case, which enabled the construction of the World Trade Center, approved the primary purpose as a public use—what is called today “economic development.”

Yet, in 1951, the Court decided Denihan Enterprises, Inc. v. O'Dwyer, 302 N.Y. 451 in which it struck down a proposed condemnation for a parking garage for a privately owned apartment building where only 17 out of the 308 spaces in the proposed garage were to be for the general public, with the balance leased to the apartment tenants. Here the Court stated that it did not view the private use as only incidental to the public use. It accepted that building a garage could be a public use but that the public use here was subordinate to the “private benefit to be conferred on the Company.”

The private use versus public use dichotomy had been earlier present in Watkins v. Ughetta, 273 App. Div. 969, 78 N.Y.S.d 393, aff’d, 297 N.Y. 1002 (1948) where the Court approved condemning private property and turning it over to homeowners whose property had been condemned for the Van Wyck Expressway, so that those houses could physically be moved to that new location. It treated the later condemnation as part and parcel of the highway condemnation. It was not a giant step from that to K & C Realty, Inc. v. State of New York, 69 Misc.2d 98, 329 N.Y.S.2d 252, aff’d, 32 N.Y.2d 664 (1973) to upholding Highway Law, Sec. 10, Subd.2d which authorized the condemnation of private property to turn over to other private homeowners, pursuant to a written agreement to do so, to provide access to their property which had been rendered landlocked as a result of a highway project condemnation. As was stated in the decision: “The Courts have consistently recognized the validity of appropriations for ‘quasi private use.’” With this, we had a new term and a new concept in the ever-widening concept in New York of what was to be deemed a “public use.”

Following this precedent, in Cannata v. City of New York, 11 N.Y.2d 210 (1962), the condemnation pursuant to General Municipal Law, § 72N of Article 15 passed muster as a public use. This statute stated that the taking of a predominately vacant area which is economically dead can be condemned as it impairs the community’s growth and tends to develop slums. The project proposed was to condemn a large area including sixty-eight homes to create sites for private development as an industrial park. The objectors contended the area was not a “slum.” The Court’s answer that an area need not be a slum and turning an area such as was involved into needed industries was a public use. The use of condemnation for economic development was born in New York. It subsequently found expression in Courtesy Sandwich Shop, supra, a year later and in In re Fisher, 287 A.D.2d 262, 730 N.Y.S.2d 56 (2001) which was a condemnation of a square block on Wall Street to expand the New York Stock Exchange on the grounds of the economic benefit to New York City. As was stated in Fisher, supra:
“Given the breadth with which public use is defined in the condemnation context (cases cited), and the restricted scope of our review of respondent’s finding in support of condemnation (cases cited), we perceive no ground upon which we might reject respondent’s finding that the condemnation of 45 Wall Street as part of respondent’s New York Stock Exchange project will result in substantial public benefit.”

The question then is what is the nature of the court’s function in all of this? In 1975 in Yonkers Community Agency v. Morris, 37 N.Y.2d 47, Otis Elevator, a large employer in Yonkers, threatened to move unless it could expand. Whereupon, Yonkers proceeded to attempt to condemn as an urban renewal project adjacent “substandard” land. The taking was challenged by the landowner. The Court held the predominant purpose was to clear substandard land and the benefit to Otis Elevator was only incidental. The Court held that for the plaintiff to succeed it had to submit proof “sufficient to sustain a charge of fraud.” It further stated that, “among other things, economic underdevelopment and stagnation are also threats to the public sufficient to make their removal cognizable as a public purpose.” However, the Court stated that once the land was deemed “substandard” it was not necessary to weigh whether the predominant benefit was to Otis Elevator or the public. Weighing the issue of the municipality’s determination of substandard, the courts, it said, have a limited role, but they are not rubber stamps for mere conclusory findings, the basis for such findings must be spelled out. While not stated there, but in other cases, where it is spelled out, the Court was not going to look behind it. The Court, however, found that the findings were never challenged by the plaintiff, that the takings had already occurred and the buildings were already demolished and in that posture no relief would be granted.

Other New York cases have applied these principles. For example, in Centerport Bird Sanctuary, Inc. v. Town of Huntington, 125 A.D.2d 521, 509 N.Y.S.2d 600 (2d Dep’t, 1986) the Court stated “public use is a term which is broadly defined to encompass any use which contributes to the health safety, general welfare, convenience or prosperity of a community.” And Matter of Horoshko v. Town of East Hampton, 90 A.D.2d 99, 456 N.Y.S.2d 99 (2d Dep’t, 1985), upheld a taking of “substandard lots” to promote proper land development.
In Northeast Parent & Child Society v. City of Schenectady, 114 A.D.2d 741, 474 N.Y.S.2d 503 (3d Dep't, 1985), the Court approved condemnation of property to increase the tax base and diversify the economy so as to promote the City’s economic welfare, citing General Municipal Law, Sec. 852 and 858. Those statutes give the basis for condemning property as to “advance the job opportunities, health, general prosperity and economic welfare—and to improve their recreation opportunities, prosperity and standard of living.” Lubella v. City of Rochester, 145 A.D.2d. 954, 536 N.Y.S.2d 325 (4th Dep't, 1988) held that acquisition as an historic landmark was a public purpose. Neptune Associates v. Con Edison Co. Of New York, 125 A.D.2d 437, 509 N.Y.S.2d, 574 (2d Dep't, 1980) stated the rule which, in effect, makes a decision to condemn virtually unchallengeable, despite the Court of Appeals statement in Yonkers Community Development Agency v. Morris, supra, that the courts would not be a rubber stamp for a potential condemner’s fact-finding as to why there should be a condemnation. It held that to undo a fact-finding one had to prove the finding was arbitrary, capricious or fraudulent. The reasoning is that such a finding is legislative in character and there attaches to it a legislative presumption of constitutionally. To overcome such a presumption requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt, unless such findings are irrational, baseless or palpably unreasonable (see Hotel Dorset Co. v. Trust for Cultural Resources of City of New York, 46 N.Y.2d 358, 413 N.Y.S.2d 357 (1978); Matter of Bottillo v. State of New York, 53 A.D.2d 975, 386 N.Y.S.2d 475 (3d Dep't, 1976); Matter of Dowling College v. Flacke, 78 A.D.2d 551, 552, 432 N.Y.S.2d 23 (2d Dep't, 1980).

While some have treated the Kelo decision as a revolutionary departure from existing law, the Kelo decision is in the mainstream of U.S. jurisprudence, and certainly in New York. The healthy and robust discussion and debate generated by the Supreme Court decision has generated significant public policy debate around dozens of potential reforms to the law of eminent domain.
III. Post-*Ke*lo Legislation Affecting the Exercise of Eminent Domain

A. State Legislative Proposals

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, to date in 2006 there have been 325 legislative proposals introduced in statehouses across the country that specifically address eminent domain in the aftermath of *Ke*lo. Seventeen bills have been introduced in the New York State Legislature addressing various aspects of eminent domain reform. Both the Senate and Assembly held a series of public hearings throughout the State in the Fall of 2005 to gather information about the use and abuse of eminent domain in New York and to determine what types of reform would be desirable. The Task Force is also aware that the New York State Law Revision Commission has been asked to examine the issue of eminent domain.

To review the various legislative proposals in New York, the Task Force developed a chart organized by subject matter to ascertain the differences and similarities in the proposed approaches. This subject index is followed by a chart that describes the primary content of the individual proposals. To date, none of the bills has been adopted.

expected tax revenue increase or expected creation of jobs); (b) the types of business/industry that will use the condemned property; and (c) alternatives to the plan. The comprehensive economic development plan must be discussed at least one public hearing and then submitted to the local government for approval. The condemnor must also create a homeowner impact assessment statement in which the actual harm to condemnees who would lose their homes will be assessed and compared with the community benefits of the plan. Finally, where a condemnee’s home/dwelling is condemned for an economic development project, the condemnee shall be entitled to compensation – in addition to statutory compensation already provide for – an amount equal to 150% of the fair market value of the property (150% also applies to annual rent values).

§207, EDPL: In a case where the condemnor substantially alters the scope of the project – or the determinations and findings, the condemnee shall have an additional 90 days from the publication of such change/alteration to seek judicial review of same.

Would require local legislative approval of any eminent domain proposal by a local development corporation (§1411, NFPCL), by an industrial development agency (§858-c, GML), or by any public authority (§1831-b, PAL).

Would provide for the creation of a temporary commission to examine, evaluate and make recommendations regarding: (a) the appropriate constitutional standard for condemnation when used for economic development purposes and (b) the procedural fairness of eminent domain laws. 14 members with a term of 1 year to coincide with the deadline for issuance of its report/findings. $100,000 budget.

B. Municipal Legislation and Resolutions Passed in the Aftermath of Kelo

In furtherance of the Task Force’s mission to examine existing and proposed legislation regarding eminent domain in New York and to recommend appropriate legal reforms, what follows is an analysis of various measures restricting the exercise of eminent domain for economic development purposes adopted or considered by local governments in New York State in response to the Kelo decision.

1. Counties

A. The legislatures of Greene County and Delaware County have adopted resolutions stating that the counties will voluntarily refrain from using their eminent domain powers to take private property to benefit another private entity or person for the purpose of generating higher tax revenue from private development of the property taken. Further, those resolutions urge the State government to review existing eminent domain laws with the goal of imposing additional limitations on the eminent domain power to protect the rights of property owners. In a similar vein, the Onondaga County legislature has adopted a resolution requesting that the County Industrial Development Agency suspend its use of eminent domain “to take private property for any project when another private entity is the principal beneficiary” in order to permit the State legislature to review proposed legislation to restrict the use of eminent domain.

B. The Oneida County Board of Legislators considered, but did not adopt, a local law to limit the use of the County’s eminent domain power to only take privately owned property needed for public uses such as water and sewer lines, roads, hospitals, public recreation areas, public buildings, floodplain and watershed development.

C. The Westchester County Board of Legislators is considering a local law that would permit the use of eminent domain powers only to facilitate public uses. The legislation would prohibit County government from using its eminent domain powers to condemn private property for private use. Under the legislation, “private use” is defined as “the possession, occupation and/or employment of a parcel of land for any purpose or function other than a ‘public use’ as defined herein and shall include development projects for retail shopping, commercial office space, industrial development and/or residential facilities."

“Public use” under the local law is defined as “(1) the possession, occupation and/or employment of a parcel of land by the general public or by public agencies or for the creation of (sic) functioning of public utilities; (2) the acquisition of property to cure a concrete harmful effect of the current use of land, including the removal of public nuisances, structures that are beyond repair or that are unfit for human habitation or use; and (3) the acquisition of abandoned property. The public benefits of economic development, including an increase in tax base, tax revenues, employment, general economic health, shall not constitute a ‘public use.’”

Even where a “public use” is involved, the legislation would condition the exercise of eminent domain authority and require a two-thirds vote of the County legislature. A public hearing and a finding that the use of such powers is necessary to “achieve a clear and convincing public use” would be prerequisites to the exercise of eminent domain authority.

A third element of the law would prohibit Westchester County government from participating in or contributing monies or other support to a project that uses eminent domain or is the beneficiary of eminent domain to take private property for “private use.” Even where a “public use” is involved, the County’s participation or contribution could only be authorized by a two-thirds vote of the members of the Board of Legislators after a public hearing and based upon a finding that the use of such powers is necessary to achieve a “clear and convincing public use.” Affordable housing development projects undertaken by a government agency or a not-for-profit corporation in partnership with a government agency are exempted from the prohibitions on the use of eminent domain to condemn private property for private use or the contribution to a project that uses or benefits from the use of eminent domain. Nevertheless, even in these instances, a vote of two-thirds of the Board of Legislators, after a public hearing and a finding that the project is an appropriate use of eminent domain as defined in this legislation, is required.
The local law would grant a private right of action to enforce the prohibitions in the legislation to any person who owns property (a) which is the object of an eminent domain taking or which is immediately adjacent to such a property; or (b) which is otherwise within 1000 feet of such property. Enforcement authority would also be conferred on County government, including the County Executive, individual members of the Board of Legislators, and municipalities in Westchester County. Those authorized to enforce the law would be further empowered to seek injunctive relief and to recover reasonable attorney’s fees and the legal costs and disbursements of any such action.

D. The County of Lewis has enacted a local law providing that “in addition to any other determinations or findings required pursuant to § 204 of the EDPL,” an essential prerequisite to the County’s exercise of eminent domain authority is a finding by the County that the property to be condemned is to be used for a “public project” and that the property to be taken is necessary for that public project. The term “public project” is defined in the legislation as any program or project for which condemnation of real property is required for a “public use, benefit or purpose,” excluding any project where the real property to be taken (a) is being “actually used or occupied for residential, commercial or agricultural purposes” at the time of the condemnation proceeding; and (b) “is or shall be transferred or conveyed” to any individual, partnership, corporation, association, trust, or legal entity upon acquisition in the condemnation proceeding.

2. Towns
A. The Town Board of Bethlehem has adopted a resolution not to exercise its eminent domain authority, absent a compelling reason and unless in compliance with the Town’s Comprehensive Plan, to take private residential property and transfer it to a private developer for purposes of economic development, improving Town tax revenues or expanding the Town’s tax base.

B. The Town Boards of Saratoga and Greece have adopted resolutions declaring that (1) eminent domain authority should only be exercised to acquire private property for public uses (highways, bridges, schools, parks, utilities and other civic works directly used by the public); and (2) eminent domain should never be used solely for economic development purposes and/or to increase tax revenues.

To implement these declarations, each resolution (a) establishes a policy limiting the Town’s use of eminent domain to public uses as defined in the resolution; and (b) petitions the State Legislature to enact similar restrictions on the exercise of the power of eminent domain by the State and its instrumentalities and departments.

C. Similarly, the Town Board of Schroon has adopted a resolution supporting the enactment of federal and state legislation limiting governmental use of eminent domain solely for public purposes (defined similarly to the Town of Greece and Town of Saratoga resolutions) that benefit the public as a whole and not solely for economic development purposes.

3. Cities and Villages

The Task Force contacted the New York State Conference of Mayors, and to date, no city government has considered local reforms to the law of eminent domain as a result of the Kelo decision.

The Village of Lima has enacted a local law adopting “expanded or additional safeguards” to be adhered to in connection with the exercise of eminent domain authority by the Village Board or any instrumentality thereof. According to those safeguards, the Village Board agrees to:

(a) limit its exercise of eminent domain authority to projects that serve “a clear and demonstrable public use” and to relinquish its power to use eminent domain for or in connection with projects “intended to assist a private landowner or foster an economic revitalization project.”

(b) expand the minimum written notice of public hearing requirement under EDPL § 202 from ten (10) to thirty (30) days.

(c) reimburse a condemnee or party whose property is taken “for reasonable costs of relocation within a radius of thirty (30) miles” of the Village “actually and proximately caused” by the Village Board’s condemnation of private land.

Copies of the legislation discussed in this Section are attached as Appendix A.
IV. Need for Empirical Research and Data

In evaluating the various legislative proposals in New York, the Task Force realized that little State-specific research and data exists to accurately assess both the need for, and impact of, many of the proposed reforms. The Task Force urges, among other things, that the State Legislature begin the collection and analysis of this data before deciding on appropriate substantive modifications to the law. What follows is a listing of questions that could be answered through empirical research.

- How is eminent domain used in the State?
- How many times each month or each year is a condemnation proceeding instituted?
- How many times is eminent domain used for roads, highways, bridges, sidewalks, schools, government buildings and sewers (among other things)?
- How many times does the use of eminent domain result in the loss of a home?
- How many times does the use of eminent domain result in the loss of a business?
- How many times is eminent domain used for economic development?
- Of the number of times eminent domain is used for economic development in New York, what are the results of the proposed projects? Are they successful? How is success to be benchmarked?
- Is the use of eminent domain more prevalent in upstate or downstate? Is it used more often in urban, suburban or rural areas?
- How often is eminent domain used in New York by the federal government, the state government, local governments, other public benefit corporations? Is it used by agencies with land use and planning oversight or agencies whose portfolio is only economic development?

• Has the use of Eminent Domain increased dramatically, as is implied by some? If so, what is responsible for that increase?

• How often do we use public-private partnerships to effectuate eminent domain for redevelopment projects in New York?

• To what extent are the so-labeled “private” transfers for matters such as industrial development that are essentially public/private partnerships?

• How many times is eminent domain not needed because there were willing sellers to enable projects to be completed?

• What efforts are made by government and developers to reach private agreements with property owners?

• Are there financial differences between property owners who settle quickly and those who do not?

• How many times are condemnations challenged based on the final compensation offer? What is the outcome of these court cases? How many times does a court award increased compensation to property owners?

• What compensation is being paid, and how does that compensation relate to market value, to costs such as relocation costs, and to subjective values, such as the nature of the planned projects?

• How many instances of abuse exist in New York State over a defined period of time (and how should “abuse” be defined)?

• Is there any information about redevelopment projects that involved the use of eminent domain and those that did not to determine whether they were equally successful? What have been the social costs and benefits of such efforts?

While this list of questions is not exclusive of the type of information that would help to inform the ongoing dialogue, the Task Force offers these as a starting point should a Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain be established. In addition to these issues that specifically relate to the use of eminent domain for economic development, the Task Force began to examine the need and opportunity for reform in other aspects of condemnation law in New York.
V. Recodification of the Eminent Domain Procedure Law

On January 7, 1970, Governor Nelson Rockefeller's annual message to the Legislature recommended the creation of a commission to recodify and modernize the State’s multitude of laws which dealt with eminent domain. The ultimate goal was to simplify the many conflicting procedures that had arisen from various statutes, compounded by a host of local rules and regulations related to governmental acquisitions of private property for public purposes. In calling for such reform, the Governor expressed that “every individual whose property is required for a public purpose is entitled to fair compensation and an equitable procedure.” This expression could only be achieved by overhauling both the procedural and substantive aspects of eminent domain. The 1970 Legislature heeded the call for reform and passed legislation necessary to create the State Commission on Eminent Domain (hereinafter “Commission”). At the outset, the Commission was confronted with more than 50 different procedures employed by different governmental units which had the power of eminent domain.

In addition to regular full commission meetings conducted at least monthly in 1970 and 1971, the Commission held public hearings and informal meetings throughout the state with representatives of various bar associations, appraisal organizations and other interest groups. In response to its charge from the executive and legislative branches, the Commission began drafting a uniform procedure code in 1971.

Initially, its focus was to create a single procedure that would apply to any takings of property by eminent domain in New York State. To establish uniformity, the Commission inserted the word “acquisition” in its proposal to eliminate the distinction between an “appropriation” which had previously denoted a taking by the State of New York, and a “condemnation” which referred to any non-state taking. The Commission also proposed that claims arising from all acquisitions by eminent domain should be heard by a single court or tribunal. As early as 1971, the same notion of a single court to hear all eminent domain claims was advanced by the Temporary Commission on the New York State Court System. The recommendation, albeit unsuccessful, was to merge the Court of Claims with Supreme Court. Had such a merger occurred, it was anticipated that the former, as an arm of Supreme Court, would hear and decide all claims arising from eminent domain.

Recognizing that court reorganization was a task well beyond its scope, the Commission on Eminent Domain sought to fit its recommendations into the existing court organization rather than defer their implementation until a single uniform tribunal became a reality. To do so, the Commission tailored its proposals to existing rules and the respective practices of the Court of Claims and Supreme Court. As a result, jurisdiction for all claims due to state acquisitions remains with the Court of Claims today, while those claims from non-state acquisitions are heard by Supreme Court.\(^{19}\)

The sought-after uniformity in all acquisition procedures under the EDPL was derailed by having to continue a system of dual tribunals. Although alterations and partial uniformity were brought about in areas such as notice, public hearings, offers and negotiations, the actual methods by which state and non-state entities acquire title in eminent domain did not change. The vesting of title in state takings remains an administrative matter, i.e., the condemnor’s filing of a map and description of the property to be acquired in the office of the clerk of the county in which the property is located.\(^{20}\) In all non-state acquisitions, title vests in a condemnor only after a judicial proceeding in Supreme Court which concludes with an order of condemnation that must be filed with a copy of the acquisition map in the office of the county clerk.\(^{21}\)

Apparently, the dual taking procedure has led to a conflict in challenges to public use where exemptions have been invoked under Article 2 of the EDPL. At present, such challenges in cases of state takings are to be in the Appellate Division,\(^{22}\) while similar challenges to non-state takings must be raised as defenses before Supreme Court in opposition to condemnors’ applications for orders of condemnation.

Enactment of the EDPL did not completely satisfy the expressed intention of providing an “exclusive procedure by which property shall be acquired by exercise of the power of eminent domain in New York state.” Indeed, Commissioner Sidney Z. Searles lamented in 1974 that “the [proposed] Eminent Domain Procedure Law [did not fulfill] the mandate of the legislation which gave it birth.” Although he concurred with Commissioner Searles, then Commissioner Jon Santemma, now a member of our present Task Force on Eminent Domain, also noted at the time that “the act as proposed by the majority of the Commission members [was] as close to a consensus as [could] be realized.” Commissioner Santemma felt compelled to underscore the essential need for a single tribunal before any legislative enactment could effectively become “an exclusive procedure [for eminent domain] in New York State.”

In addition to crafting a procedural proposal which was ultimately passed by the 1977 Legislature and became the EDPL, as of July 1, 1978, the Commission studied the substantive aspects of eminent domain. In particular, the Commission through this study discovered and noted that the substantive and procedural aspects of eminent domain were inextricably interwoven. It concluded that any meaningful modernization of the law of eminent domain would require redefinition of many areas of the substantive law before being deemed complete. Specifically, the Commission referred to such consequential items as business losses, changes of grade without any direct takings, changes in access to remaining properties without accompanying changes in highest and best use, and noise. While noting prior legislative attempts at remedial legislation in the area of relocation allowances for both business owners and homeowners, the Commission left little doubt that more changes could have been and should be made with regard to the substantive law.

26 Id. at 259.
28 L. 1977, c. 839, §3.

Notwithstanding its concern, the Commission was faced with a preliminary question of what remedial devices were available to quickly speed the pace of such substantive reform. Because one of its proposed remedies for substantive reform was an amendment to the New York State Constitution transforming a “taking” formulation for just compensation to “taking or damage,” the Commission’s concern encountered a threshold consideration. Constitutional amendment caused several Commission members to fear that the remedy might far exceed the required revisions to substantive law and result in such increased costs that necessary public projects would be seriously curtailed. The alternative, remediation by statute, was unacceptable to the Commission because a statute could not be drafted with the degree of certainty necessary to prevent remote claims for compensability. Faced with this dilemma, the Commission left it to the Legislature to give serious consideration to the enactment of a constitutional amendment. To date, no such consideration has been forthcoming.

In the approximately twenty-eight years since enactment of the EDPL, little recodification has occurred. Actually, the vast majority of its provisions remains in its original form. In those instances where the EDPL has been amended, alterations consist primarily of word substitutions. For example, in 1982 the definition of condemnee was changed from “the owner of” a real property interest to “the holder of” an interest in real property. Given the constraint of New York’s two-tiered system for state and non-state takings, most procedural changes via recodification have to await a constitutional amendment as a forerunner to the hoped-for single tribunal in claims arising from eminent domain. This is particularly so in the areas of “vesting” and “possession” governed by Article 4 of the EDPL, and “jurisdictional” matters embodied within Article 5.

One notable exception to any restraint on recodification is in the area of EDPL Article 2 which includes public projects, their definition, need and location. These areas, pushed to the front burner by the recent Kelo decision, can be dealt with now. The Legislature seems more than ready to take on such a challenge at this time.
There is a critical need today for codification in the substantive law of eminent domain. While hesitancy is understandable in cases where there are no takings to bring losses within the ambit of just compensation, this concern should not thwart reform in instances where governments have made acquisitions for public purposes. Indeed, Commissioner Searles in 1974 was adamant in urging that “the entire concept of damages in condemnation should be modernized.”29 It is the substantive law of eminent domain which remains most murky today. It cries out for serious study and immediate clarification. The impetus for any future reform in the field of eminent domain should be directed at the substantive law. With this as a goal, it is possible that needed changes in the area of compensation will relieve some of the pressures that have recently arisen with regard to the procedures integral to the acquisition process.

VI. Recommendations

The Task Force has unanimously adopted eight recommendations, in response to legislation introduced in recent months. These recommendations largely reflect the Task Force focus to date on the legal issues contained in the seventeen bills currently pending before the New York State Legislature. At this time, the Task Force has not adopted recommendations that address all of the proposed areas of reform contained in the various bills. In addition, the Task Force has not had the time yet to more thoroughly review additional opportunities for reform of the Eminent Domain Procedure Law. The following recommendations are not listed in any order of priority or preference.

1. Eminent domain should not be restricted to specified public projects. Some of the bills introduced in the wake of the Kelo decision have attempted to list certain purposes, such as roads, parks and schools, as the only exercises of eminent domain to be allowed by law. The Task Force believes it is unduly restrictive, and probably not practicable, to so circumscribe the power of eminent domain.

2. Local governments should not have a veto over exercises of eminent domain by public authorities of larger entities within their borders. Where public authorities such as the Empire State Development Corporation or Metropolitan Transportation Authority employ eminent domain, the legislative intent supporting the grant of that power would be subverted by proposals to allow localities to override it. Were that the case, local governments would be enabled to veto proposals of statewide or regional benefit.

3. Agencies exercising eminent domain for economic development purposes should be required to prepare a comprehensive economic development plan and a property owner impact assessment. This would improve the existing process by mandating that agencies document the economic benefits they anticipate from exercises of eminent domain for economic development, as well as the expected impact on those whose property is to be acquired. These documents, like those prepared under the State Environmental Quality Review Act (SEQRA) (Environmental Conserv. Law art. 8), should be subject to judicial review at the instance of aggrieved parties. This legislation will require agencies to examine the likely benefits and impacts of economic development projects before irreversibly committing public resources and displacing owners from their property.

4. The present 30-day statute of limitations in EDPL § 207 for judicial review of the condemnor’s determination and findings should be expanded. EDPL § 204 requires the condemning agency to find that the project has a “public use, benefit or purpose,” as well as describe its “general effect . . . on the environment and residents of the locality.” The extremely short current time limit places residents in limbo. Thirty days is simply not sufficient time for many property owners to retain an attorney and for that attorney to bring suit to challenge agency determinations and findings for projects the agency has often been working on for months if not years. Lengthening the time limit will level the playing field.

5. A new public hearing under EDPL § 201 should be required where there has been substantial change in the scope of a proposed economic development project involving the exercise of eminent domain. In the course of large-scale phased development projects, the scope of the project, as well as the nature of the development itself, may well shift. When that occurs, a further hearing should be held, and further findings made, to support the project as a public use. The SEQRA process furnishes an effective model here, since it requires a supplemental environmental impact statement when significant changes in a project are contemplated. See the Department of Environmental Conservation’s SEQRA regulations, 6 N.Y.C.R.R. § 617.9(a)(7), providing for a supplemental environmental impact statement to address “changes proposed for the project; or newly discovered information; or a change in circumstances related to the project.” Contrary to these concerns, EDPL § 205, authorizing condemnors to amend projects where “field conditions warrant,” explicitly states that “[s]uch amendments or alterations shall not require further public hearings[,]" This provision should be repealed. Its practical effect is to preclude public participation and examination despite dramatic changes in the nature, and perhaps the size, of an acquisition, as well as whether it continues to serve a public use at all.

6. No exceptions to the EDPL are necessary for acquiring property for public utility purposes. Legislation has been proposed creating a separate procedure where municipalities seek to acquire property to operate a public utility under Gen. Mun. Law § 360. There is no justification for singling out these acquisitions for different treatment. The EDPL was expressly enacted “to provide the exclusive procedure by which property shall be acquired by exercise of the power of eminent domain in New York state.” EDPL § 101.

7. Acquisitions should not be exempted from the EDPL’s eminent domain procedures simply because other statutes provide for land-use review. Some have suggested exempting acquisitions from the EDPL’s procedural requirements where alternative statutes regulating land use, such as the City of New York’s Uniform Land Use Review Procedure (ULURP), exist. We disagree. Not only is the EDPL intended to “provide the exclusive procedure” for eminent domain (see item 6, supra), but the purposes of ULURP, SEQRA and similar statutes are different from those of the EDPL. The courts have developed an appropriate interaction between the EDPL and SEQRA. EDPL § 207 expressly provides for judicial review of compliance with SEQRA. See Pizzuti v. MTA, 67 N.Y.2d 1039, 503 N.Y.S.2d 720 (1986). Similarly, EDPL § 206 now sensibly exempts de minimis takings from its provisions, as well as takings governed by other laws, such as the Public Service Law siting articles, where the condemnor “considers and submits factors similar to those” mandated by the EDPL. But laws such as ULURP and SEQRA serve fundamentally different purposes from those of the EDPL, and should not be employed to bypass the EDPL’s procedures.
8. A Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain should be established. The Kelo decision and the publicity it engendered have focused attention on the complex legal, economic and constitutional issues surrounding eminent domain. While this Task Force may indeed make additional recommendations, and is continuing to study topics such as defining public use, the appropriate level of judicial scrutiny, just compensation, and others, we believe legislative proposals for a Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain make sense. Resolving these issues will best be accomplished through study by a variety of stakeholders to assure that all viewpoints are represented.
VII. Conclusion

The Task Force believes there is still more work to be done. The Task Force has presented this report with the offer to President A. Vincent Buzard that the Task Force members are willing to continue to discuss and debate significant constitutional, jurisdictional and other legal aspects of eminent domain reform in New York. The Task Force urges the Executive Committee and the House of Delegates of the New York State Bar Association to adopt the eight specific recommendations contained in this report and to direct the Government Relations staff of the Bar Association to communicate these recommendations to the New York State Legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 376-05

REGARDING VOLUNTARY RESTRICTIONS BY THE COUNTY ON ITS POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN

Legislator Ohm offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

WHEREAS, The United States Supreme Court on June 23, 2005 decided the case of Kelo v. City of New London, (545 U.S. 469) in which the Court upheld the taking of private eminent domain in furtherance of an economic development plan that it is believed will provide appreciable benefits to the community; and

WHEREAS, opponents have argued that eminent domain should only be used for projects that have a clear public purpose, not private projects that typically displace less affluent communities to make way for developments enriching both the municipality and the developer; and

WHEREAS, lawmakers in 34 states have introduced bills or begun to study ways to prohibit use of eminent domain for private economic development; and

WHEREAS, the New York State Assembly is hosting a series of statewide hearings on eminent domain to discuss what changes, if any, should be made to the long held ability of governments to take property for public use if its owner refuses to sell outright; and

WHEREAS, promoting economic development is a traditional and long accepted function of government; and

WHEREAS, the Fifth Amendment to the federal Constitution prohibits the taking of private property for public use without just compensation;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the County of Greene shall voluntarily forego the use of its power of eminent domain pursuant to the eminent domain procedural law of the State of New York insofar as it will refrain from taking private real property to benefit another private entity or person for the purposes of generating higher tax revenue from private development of the property so seized, and shall support only property exchanged through voluntary methods in the market place; and

IT IS FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Legislature hereby resolves that it is in the public interest of the people of Greene County to have the State government review the current eminent domain laws with the goal of placing additional limitations on the eminent domain power beyond those already contained in the law protecting the property owners.

STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF GREENE

I, the undersigned,

DO HEREBY CERTIFY that I have compared the above copy of a resolution adopted November 16, 2005 with the original record in my office and that the same is a correct transcript thereof and of the whole of said original record.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the official seal of said Greene County Legislature this day of November, 2005.

Acting Clerk, Greene County Legislature

Approved by Gov't. Ops. Comm.: 11/14/05

COUNTY ATTORNEY
RESOLUTION NO. 299

TITLE: REGARDING VOLUNTARY RESTRICTIONS BY THE COUNTY ON ITS POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN

WHEREAS, the United States Supreme Court on June 23, 2005 decided the case of Kelo vs. City of New London, (125 s.Ct. 2655) in which the court upheld the taking of private property by a municipality or entity with the power of eminent domain in furtherance of an economic development plan that it is believed will provide appreciable benefits to the community; and

WHEREAS, opponents have argued that eminent domain should only be used for projects that have a clear public purpose, not private projects that typically displace less affluent communities to make way for developments enriching both the municipality and the developer; and

WHEREAS, lawmakers in 34 states have introduced bills or begun to study ways to prohibit use of eminent domain for private economic development; and

WHEREAS, the New York State Assembly is hosting a series of statewide hearings on eminent domain to discuss what changes, if any, should be made to the long held ability of governments to take property for public use if its owner refuses to sell outright; and

WHEREAS, promoting economic development is a traditional and long accepted function of government; and

WHEREAS, the Fifth Amendment to the federal Constitution prohibits the taking of private property for public use without just compensation;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the County of Delaware shall voluntarily forgo the use of its power of eminent domain pursuant to the Eminent Domain Procedural Law of the State of New York so as it will refrain from taking private real property to benefit another private entity or person for the purposes of generating higher tax revenue from private development of the property so seized, and shall support only property exchanged through voluntary methods in the market place, and

IT IS FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Board of Supervisors hereby resolves that it is in the public interest of the people of Delaware County to have the State government review the current eminent domain laws with the goal of placing additional limitations on the eminent domain power beyond those already contained in the law protecting the property owners.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that copies of this resolution shall be forwarded immediately to Senator John Bonacic, Assemblyman Clifford Crouch, Assemblyman Daniel Hooker and The Association of Counties.

State of New York
County of Delaware

I, Christa M. Schafer, Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Delaware County, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by said Board on the 14th day of December, 2005 and the whole thereof.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said Board at Delhi, New York, this 15th day of December, 2005.

Motion Made By Mr. DiBlasi

RESOLUTION NO. 162

REQUESTING THAT THE ONONDAGA COUNTY INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY SUSPEND THE USE OF ITS EMINENT DOMAIN POWERS TO CONDEMN PRIVATE PROPERTY FOR PROJECTS THAT PRINCIPALLY BENEFIT ANOTHER PRIVATE PARTY PENDING ACTION BY THE NYS LEGISLATURE IN THE 2006 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

WHEREAS, the Onondaga County Industrial Development Agency (OCIDA) is an independent agency whose powers are derived from the State of New York, including Title 1 of Article 18-A of the General Municipal Law; and

WHEREAS, pursuant to the provisions of the General Municipal Law and the Eminent Domain Procedure Law, OCIDA is authorized to acquire private property for a public purpose by exercising the powers of eminent domain; and

WHEREAS, OCIDA's authorization to condemn property includes the power to take property from private parties, even if the taking will benefit another private entity; and

WHEREAS, there has been introduced into the NYS legislature proposed legislation to address the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision in Kelo v. City of New London to severely restrict on a statewide basis the right to condemn private property; and

WHEREAS, this Legislature encourages economic development in Onondaga County; and

WHEREAS, this Legislature also respects the rights of the owners of businesses and other private property; and,

WHEREAS, it is the opinion of this Legislature that OCIDA should suspend the use of its eminent domain power to take the property of one private party for the benefit of another private party until such time as the State has had the opportunity to review the proposed state legislation in the 2006 State Legislative session; now, therefore be it

RESOLVED, that in recognition of the interests of the owners of businesses and other private property, this Legislature hereby requests that OCIDA suspend the use of its eminent domain powers to take private property for any project where another private entity is the principal beneficiary of the project, for the 2006 New York State Legislative session, to give the New York State Legislature an opportunity to review the proposed legislation; and, be it further

RESOLVED, that the Clerk of this Legislature hereby is directed to send a certified copy of this resolution to OCIDA.

Local Law No. 1 of the year 2006

A local law procedurally limiting the authority of the Village of Lima to exercise the statutory right of eminent domain.

Be it enacted by the Board of Trustees of the ☐ County

☐ City of Lima
☐ Town ☐ Village

Section 1.

This Local Law shall be known as the "Eminent Domain Local Law of the Village of Lima," and the purpose and intent of this local law is to procedurally limit the authority of the Village of Lima to exercise its statutory right of eminent domain, as authorized by the Eminent Domain Procedure Law of the State of New York. It is explicitly understood and provided that this local law shall govern any eminent domain proceeding initiated by the Village Board of the Village of Lima, but that said local law does not and is not intended to alter, affect or impair the Eminent Domain Procedure Law as it applies to other municipal or legal jurisdictions with authority to exercise the power of eminent domain. This local law is understood and intended to apply only to such instances in which the Village of Lima and/or its instrumentalities may initiate an eminent domain proceeding.

Section 2.

This Local Law is adopted pursuant to the authority granted by Municipal Home Rule Law.

Section 3.

The Village Board of the Village of Lima promulgates this local law to express the Board's formulation of its own public policy statement in the matter of eminent domain.

(If additional space is needed, attach pages the same size as this sheet, and number each.)
Section 4.

In any action undertaken by the Village Board of the Village of Lima or any instrumentality thereof with the authority to exercise the power of eminent domain, the Village Board of the Village of Lima stipulates to be bound by the following regulations which procedurally alter or amend the right of the Village Board of the Village of Lima to exercise its statutory right of eminent domain, acknowledging that said regulations may expand or exceed the procedural safeguards presently accorded private landowners in connection with an exercise of eminent domain rights by a municipal government under the Eminent Domain Procedure Law of the State of New York.

The Village Board of the Village of Lima hereby stipulates that the following expanded or additional procedural safeguards shall be observed and utilized in each and every instance in which the Village Board of the Village of Lima and/or its instrumentalties shall initiate an eminent domain action:

A. The Village Board shall have authority to exercise its statutory right of eminent domain only in connection with a project or need that serves a clear and demonstrable public use; it is specifically intended that the Village Board relinquishes its right of eminent domain for or in connection with a project that is intended to assist a private landowner or foster an economic revitalization project.

B. The Village Board agrees that written notice requirements pursuant to the Eminent Domain Procedure Law authorizing a ten (10) day notice of a public hearing (as required by EDPL section 202), the notice period is to be expanded to thirty (30) days.

C. The Village agrees that it shall be responsible to reimburse a condemnee or party whose property is taken by the Village through an eminent domain proceeding, for reasonable costs of relocation within a radius of thirty (30) miles of the Village of Lima, if such relocation costs are actually and proximately caused by the taking of private land by said Village Board of the Village of Lima or its instrumentality.

Section 5.

This Local Law shall take effect within thirty (30) days of its filing in the Office of the Secretary of State.

County of Lewis

Local Law No. 6 of the Year 2005

“A LOCAL LAW ESTABLISHING LIMITS TO THE EXERCISE OF EMINENT DOMAIN FOR LEWIS COUNTY.”

(Insert Title)

BE IT ENACTED by the Board of Legislators of the County of Lewis, as follows:

SECTION I. TITLE.

This Local Law shall be known as “ESTABLISHING LIMITS TO THE EXERCISE OF EMINENT DOMAIN FOR LEWIS COUNTY”.

SECTION II. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Local Law is to establish certain limits to the exercise of eminent domain by or for the County of Lewis (the “County”).

SECTION III. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this LOCAL law:

(A) “Acquisition” means the act of vesting of title, right or interest to, real property by the County by virtue of the County’s exercise of the power of eminent domain.

(B) “Eminent Domain Procedure Law” (EDPL) shall mean the New York State Eminent Domain Procedure Law as the same may be amended from time to time.

(C) “Person” means any individual, partnership, corporation, association, trust, or legal entity.

(D) “Real property” includes all land and improvements, lands under water, waterfront property, the water of any lake, pond or stream, all easements and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, and every estate, interest and right, legal or equitable, in lands or water, and rights, interest, privilege, easement and franchise relating to the same, including terms for years and liens by way of mortgage.
or otherwise.

(E) "Public project" means any program or project for which acquisition of real property may be required for a public use, benefit or purpose, pursuant to the EDPL, provided however, that "public project" shall specifically exclude:

a. any project wherein the real property that is the subject of the proceeding is, at the time of such proceedings, being actually used or occupied for residential, commercial or agricultural purposes; and

b. the title or interest in or to the property to be acquired by the County pursuant to the EDPL, upon acquisition, is or shall be transferred or conveyed by grant, deed, easement, lease or otherwise to a person.

SECTION IV. APPLICABILITY.

This Local Law shall apply to any and all takings of real property pursuant to the EDPL by or for the County of Lewis.

SECTION V. DETERMINATIONS AND FINDINGS.

In addition to any other determinations and/or findings that may be required pursuant to EDPL § 204, upon conducting a public hearing as required by EDPL § 203, the County shall affirmatively determine and find:

c. That the property proposed to be acquired by the County shall, upon acquisition, be used for a public project, as defined herein; and

d. That the property proposed to be acquired is necessary for the proposed public project.

SECTION VI. AUTHORITY.

This Local Law shall take effect 45 days after the adoption hereof and all legal requirements having been met.

Utica, New York 13501

Honorable Members:

I have received a draft of a Local Law from Legislator Pamela N. Mandryck regarding Oneida County's power of taking land by eminent domain to be used by the County for only public purposes and for those purposes that would be of benefit to the general community.

Pursuant to Mrs. Mandryck's request, I hereby forward the attached to the full Board for consideration at the next available opportunity.

Respectfully submitted,

GERALD J. Fiorini
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

RE: Eminent Domain Powers

Dear Chairman Fiorini:

In view of the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision in Kelo v. City of New London, which allows a municipality to take private property from a private landowner to provide the same to a private contractor under the guise of economic development, I submit the attached proposed local law.

This local law would limit Oneida County’s exercise of its power of land taking by eminent domain to only those properties needed for public uses and for the public’s benefit, e.g., water/sewer lines, public buildings and hospitals, public recreational areas, etc.

I ask that you present this proposed local law to the Legislators for their immediate consideration. The private landowners of Oneida County need to be reassured that their homes and land holdings are not in danger of being taken by their County government for the benefit of private contractors.

I understand that legislation of this type is being considered by other counties in New York State. I would like Oneida County to be at the forefront of providing this particular safeguard and guarantee to its citizens.

I thank you for your kind attention to this request for action.

Very truly yours,

ONEIDA COUNTY BOARD OF LEGISLATORS

RESOLUTION NO.

INTRODUCED BY:

2ND BY:

RE: A LOCAL LAW LIMITING THE USE OF THE COUNTY'S POWER TO TAKE PRIVATE PROPERTY BY EMINENT DOMAIN TO PROPERTY WHICH WILL BE USED BY THE COUNTY FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES ONLY

Legislative Intent: It is the intent of this Local Law to limit the County's power to take private property by eminent domain to those properties which will be used for public purposes only. The recent U.S. Supreme Court decision in Kelo v. City of New London authorized the use of eminent domain proceedings to take the homes, small businesses or other private property of one owner and transfer that same property to another private owner under the reasoning that such a taking and transfer will benefit the community through increased economic development. The Board of Legislators believes the protection of homes, small business and other private properties from government seizure or other governmental intrusion is a fundamental principle and core commitment of our nation's founders, and that the ability of government to take someone's private property should be limited to property needed for public uses such as water/ sewer lines, roads, hospitals, public recreational areas, public buildings, development of electricity, flood plain and watershed development and other similar projects that provide a wider public benefit.

BE IT ENACTED by the Board of County Legislators of the County of Oneida, State of New York, as follows:

1. The Oneida County Board of Legislators shall limit its power to take privately owned property by eminent domain to only those properties or pieces of land needed for the siting, construction, development and creation of public properties for use by or benefit to the general public.

2. The Oneida County Board of Legislators shall not exercise its authority to take by eminent domain privately owned lands containing homes, small businesses and other property dedicated to private use in order to transfer such properties to other private owners for the purposes of economic development as provided for in the U. S. Supreme Court decision set forth in Kelo v. City of New London.

This Local Law shall take effect immediately in accordance with Section 20, 21 and 27 of New York State Municipal Home Rule Law.

RESOLUTION NO. -2005

RESOLVED, that this Board hold a public hearing pursuant to Section 209.141(4) of the Laws of Westchester County on Local Law Intro No. -2005 entitled "A LOCAL LAW to Amend the Laws of Westchester County to restrict the use of eminent domain." The public hearing will be held at PM on the day of , 2005 in the Chambers of the Board of Legislators, 8th Floor, Michaelian Office Building, White Plains, New York. The Clerk of the Board shall cause notice of the time and date of such hearing to be published at least once in one or more newspapers published in the County of Westchester and selected by the Clerk of the Board for that purpose in the manner and time required by law.
BOARD OF LEGISLATORS
COUNTY OF WESTCHESTER

Your Committee respectfully recommends enactment of a new Westchester County Law to restrict the use of eminent domain powers only to facilitate public uses.

Your Committee notes that there are increasing demands on governments to use their powers of condemnation through eminent domain.

Your Committee finds that such powers of condemnation should be used only to facilitate genuine public uses and that action is necessary to protect the community from the harmful impacts of the unwarranted use of such condemnation in the taking of private property for public use.

In light of the aforementioned, your Committee recommends the adoption of the attached Local Law.

Dated: , 2005

White Plains, New York
LOCAL LAW INTRO NO. -2005

A LOCAL LAW amending the Laws of Westchester County to restrict the use of eminent domain.

BE IT ENACTED by the County Board of the County of Westchester as follows:

Section 1. Legislative Intent.

The Westchester County Board of Legislators finds that there are increasing demands on governments to use their powers of condemnation through eminent domain, that such powers of condemnation should be used only to facilitate genuine public uses and that action is necessary to protect the community from the harmful impacts of the unwarranted use of such powers of condemnation in the taking of private property for public use.

Section 2. Definitions.

(a) “Person” as used herein shall mean any individual, partnership, corporation or other entity living, working or doing business in Westchester County.

(b) “Private use” as used herein shall mean the possession, occupation and/or employment of a parcel of land for any purpose or function other than a “public use” as defined herein and shall include development projects for retail shopping, commercial office space, industrial development and/or residential facilities.

(c) “Public use” as used herein shall mean: (1) the possession, occupation and/or employment of a parcel of land by the general public or by public agencies or for the creation of functioning of public utilities; (2) the acquisition of property to cure a concrete harmful effect of the current use of land, including the removal of public nuisances, structures that are beyond repair or that are unfit for human habitation or use; and/or (3) the acquisition of abandoned property. The public benefits of economic development, including an increase in tax base, tax revenues, employment, general economic health, shall not constitute a "public use."

(d) "Westchester County government" as used herein shall mean the government of the County of Westchester as duly constituted under the laws of the State of New York and all of its departments, agencies, subdivisions and instrumentalities and all persons acting under its auspices or exercising its powers.

Section 3. Eminent Domain for Private Use Prohibited

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Westchester County government may use its powers of eminent domain to condemn private property only as follows:

(1) The Westchester County government is hereby prohibited from using its powers of eminent domain to condemn private property for private use.

(2) The Westchester County government may use its powers of eminent domain to condemn private property only upon the vote of two-thirds of the members of the Board of Legislators, after public hearing thereon, finding that the use of such powers is necessary to achieve a clear and convincing public use, as defined in this legislation.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Westchester County government may participate in and/or contribute monies or other support to a project that uses eminent domain or is the beneficiary of the use of eminent domain only as follows:
(1) The Westchester County government is hereby prohibited from participating in or contributing funds to, in any way, in any project that uses eminent domain or is the beneficiary of the use of eminent domain to take private property for private use.

(2) The Westchester County government may participate in or contribute funds to or other support to a project that uses eminent domain or is the beneficiary of the use of eminent domain only upon the vote of two-thirds of the members of the Board of Legislators, after public hearing thereon, finding that the use of such powers is necessary to achieve a clear and convincing public use, as defined in this legislation.

(c) Affordable housing development projects by a government agency or by a not-for-profit corporation in partnership with a government agency shall be exempted from the foregoing prohibitions on the use eminent domain to condemn private property for private use or the contribution to a project that uses or benefits from the use of eminent domain, but such use or contribution is prohibited unless first approved by the vote of two-thirds of the members of the Board of Legislators, after public hearing thereon, that such project is an appropriate use of eminent domain, as defined in this legislation.

Section 4. Private Right of Action

Any person who owns property which is the object of an eminent domain condemnation or which is immediately adjacent thereto or otherwise within 1000 feet thereof may enforce the prohibitions contained herein.

Section 5. Enforcement.

(a) In addition to those who have a private right of action as set forth above, this local law may be enforced by the Westchester County government as defined herein, including the County Executive and any individual member of the Board of Legislators, as well as the local municipal governments geographically located in Westchester County.

(b) In addition to remedies otherwise available under law, the aforesaid and those with a private right of action may seek injunctive relief in any court of appropriate jurisdiction and shall be entitled to reasonable attorney’s fees, legal costs and the disbursements of said action.

Section 7. No Waiver

As waiver of the provisions of this local law is contrary to public policy, any waiver shall be void and unenforceable.

Section 8. Severability

If any section of this chapter or the application thereof to any person shall be adjudged invalid or unconstitutional by any court of competent jurisdiction, such order or judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the controversy in which such order or judgment was rendered.

Section 9. Effective Date

This local law shall take effect ninety (90) days after its enactment.
RESOLVED, that:

(1) The Town Board of the Town of Saratoga-

(A) disagrees with the majority opinion in Susette Kelo v. City of New London in its holdings that effectively negate the public use requirement of the Takings Clause; and agrees with the dissenting opinion in Susette Kelo v. City of New London in its upholding of the historical interpretation of the Takings Clause and its deference to the rights of individuals and their property; and

(2) it is the sense of the Town Board of the Town of Saratoga that-

(A) state and local governments should only execute the power of eminent domain for those public uses that comply with the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment;

(B) state and local governments must always justly compensate individuals whose property is assumed through eminent domain in accordance with the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment;

(C) any execution of eminent domain by state and local government that does comply with subparagraphs (A) and (B) constitutes an abuse of government power and an usurpation of the individual property rights, contrary to the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment;

(D) eminent domain should never be used to advantage one private party over another;
(E) eminent domain should never be used solely for the purpose of economic development and/or to increase tax revenues;

(F) eminent domain should be solely used to acquire private property for public use, e.g., highways, bridges, schools, parks, public utilities, dams, and other civic works directly used by the public;

(G) the Town Board of the Town of Saratoga hereby establishes a policy to limit its use of eminent domain to the public uses expressly outlined in this resolution and in accordance with the dissenting decision in Susette Kelo v. City of New London; and

(H) the Town Board of the Town of Saratoga hereby petitions the State Legislature to adopt statutory limitations on the use of eminent domain by the State of New York and its departments, agencies, development corporation, and authorities to limit the use of eminent domain to the public uses expressly outlined in this resolution and in accordance with the dissenting decision in Susette Kelo v. City of New London.

This Resolution shall take effect immediately.

Resolution No. __38____

TOWN OF BETHLEHEM RESOLUTION
IMPOSING A RESTRAINT ON THE EXERCISE OF THE POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN

WHEREAS, the state law grants the Town of Bethlehem the power of eminent domain to condemn property for any public purpose; and,

WHEREAS, the Town Board believes that the exercise of the Town’s power of eminent domain should be balanced with the State and Federal Constitutional protections of private property; and,

WHEREAS, on June 23, 2005, the U.S. Supreme Court in its decision in Kelo v. City of New London, found it permissible under the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution for a municipality to seize residential property and transfer it to a private developer in order to promote economic development; and,

WHEREAS, the Town Board respectfully disagrees with the United States Supreme Court’s interpretation of “public use” in the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution; and,

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that without compelling reason, and unless in compliance with the Town Comprehensive Plan, the Town shall not exercise its power of eminent domain upon private residential property and transfer it to a private developer for the purpose of improving tax revenue or expanding the tax base or for the purpose of economic development.

Town of Greece, Monroe County

RESOLUTION

Expressing the Disapproval by the Town Board of the Town of Greece of the Majority Opinion of the United States Supreme Court in the Case of Kelo v. City of New London that Nullifies the Protections Afforded Private Property Owners in the United States Constitution; Adopting a Town Policy to Protect Private Property Owners' Rights; and Petitioning the State Legislature to Enact State Constitutional and Statutory Protections for Property Owners

Whereas, the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution states “nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation”;

Whereas, the Fourteenth Amendment extended the application of the Fifth Amendment to every state and local government;

Whereas, the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment has historically been interpreted and applied by the United States Supreme Court to be conditioned upon the necessity that government assumption of private property through eminent domain must be for the public use and requires just compensation;

Whereas, the opinion of the majority in Kelo v. City of New London justifies the forfeiture of a person’s private property through eminent domain for the sole benefit of another private person rather than for public use;

Whereas, the dissenting opinion in Kelo v. City of New London upholds the historical interpretation of the Takings Clause and affirms that “the public use requirement imposes a more basic limitation upon government, circumscribing the very scope of the eminent domain power: government may compel an individual to forfeit her property for the public’s use, but not for the benefit of another private person”;

Whereas, the dissenting opinion in Kelo v. City of New London holds that the “standard this Court has adopted for the Public Use Clause is therefore deeply perverse” and the beneficiaries of this decision are “likely to be those citizens with disproportionate influence and power in the political process, including large corporations and development firms” and “the government now has license to transfer property from those with fewer resources to those with more”; and

Whereas, all levels of government have a Constitutional responsibility and a moral obligation to always defend the property rights of individuals and only to execute the power of eminent domain for the good of public use and contingent upon the just compensation of the individual property owner;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE TOWN BOARD OF THE TOWN OF GREECE, as follows:

Section 1. The Town Board of the Town of Greece —

(A) disagrees with the majority opinion in Kelo v. City of New London and its holdings that effectively negate the public use requirement of the Takings Clause; and

(B) agrees with the dissenting opinion in Kelo v. City of New London in its upholding of the historical interpretation of the Takings Clause and its deference to the rights of individuals and their property.

Section 2. It is the sense of the Town Board of the Town of Greece that—

(A) state and local governments should only execute the power of eminent domain for those public uses that comply with the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment;

(B) state and local governments must always justly compensate those individuals whose property is assumed through eminent domain in accordance with the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment;

(C) any execution of eminent domain by state and local government that does not comply with subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this section constitutes an abuse of government power and an usurpation of the individual property rights, contrary to the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment;

(D) eminent domain should never be used to advantage one private party over another;

(E) eminent domain should never be used solely for the purpose of economic development and/or to increase tax revenues; and
(F) eminent domain should be solely used to acquire private property for public use, e.g., highways, bridges, schools, parks, public utilities and other civic works directly used by the public.

Section 3. The Town Board of the Town of Greece hereby establishes a policy to limit its use of eminent domain to the public uses expressly outlined in this resolution and in accordance with the dissenting decision in Kelo v. City of New London.

Section 4. The Town Board of the Town of Greece hereby petitions the State Legislature to adopt State constitutional and statutory limitations on the use of eminent domain by the State of New York and its departments, agencies, development corporation, and authorities to limit the use of eminent domain to the public uses expressly outlined in this resolution and in accordance with the dissenting decision in Kelo v. City of New London.

Section 5. The Town Clerk is authorized and directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the Governor of the State of New York, the Members of the New York State Legislature representing the Town of Greece, the County Executive of the County of Monroe, the President of the County Legislature of the County of Monroe, and the Members of the County Legislature of the County of Monroe representing the Town of Greece.

Section 6. This resolution shall take effect immediately.
Town of Schroon, Essex County

RESOLUTION OPPOSING THE U.S. SUPREME COURT RULING CONCERNING THE POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN.

The following resolution was moved by: Roger Friedman

RESOLUTION

WHEREAS, eminent domain is the power of government to take private property and take title for public use, provided owners receive just compensation; and

WHEREAS, the United States Supreme Court in Kelo v. City of New London held by a 5-4 decision that government may seize the home, small business, or other private property of one owner and transfer that same property to another private owner, simply by concluding that such a transfer would benefit the community through increased economic development; and

WHEREAS, this Resolution is adopted to support prohibiting transfers of private property without the owner’s consent, if the transfer is for purposes of economic development rather than public use; and

WHEREAS, the protection of homes, small businesses, and other private property rights against government seizure and other unreasonable government interference is a fundamental principle and core commitment of our nation’s founders and the essence of what they fought for in the defense of their homes and private property; and

WHEREAS, the Town board of the Town of Schroon supports legislation currently being promulgated in the United States Congress and in the State of New York Legislature, that would clarify government’s exercise of its power of eminent domain to be limited only for public use, rather than for economic development, and this standard of protection would apply to all exercises of eminent domain power by the local, and state governments, and
NOW THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED THAT: the Town Board of the Town of Schroon is of the opinion that eminent domain powers should be limited to such public projects as water or sewer lines, roads, streets, public parks, public buildings, electricity development and other similar projects that benefit the public as a whole and that the power of eminent domain should not be used simply to further private economic development; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT: the Town Board of the Town of Schroon does hereby support and advocate the passage of federal and state legislation to limit government’s use of eminent domain for solely public purposes and protect the property of private citizens from unreasonable seizure by federal, state and local governments.

LET IT BE FURTHER RESOLVED THAT: this resolution be forwarded to Governor George E. Pataki, Congressman John Sweeney, Assembly Majority Leader Sheldon Silver, Senator Elizabeth Little, Assemblywoman Teresa Sayward, Senator Joseph Bruno, Assemblyman Roy MacDonald, U.S. Senator Charles Schumer, U.S. Senator Hillary Clinton, NYS Association of Towns and Villages, AATV, and the Essex County Board of Supervisors.

Letter from NYSBA President Mark Alcott
September 27, 2006

The Honorable Charles E. Schumer
United States Senator
313 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Schumer:

On behalf of the New York State Bar Association and its Special Task Force on Eminent Domain, we strongly urge you to oppose S. 3873, sponsored by Senator Inhofe. In the aftermath of the United States Supreme Court ruling in Kelo v. City of New London (125 S. Ct. 2655 (2005)), the New York State Bar Association established a Special Task Force to evaluate the Eminent Domain Procedure Law in the state. Thereafter, the Special Task Force made several recommendations, the most important of which stated that the use of eminent domain should not be restricted to specified public projects.

The proposed Senate Bill 3873 fails to adequately address many of the concerns posed by Kelo relating to the protection of property rights, and potentially establishes the groundwork for a new set of abuses related to the application of eminent domain, such as the loss of federal funds relating to economic development. In addition, the proposed legislation creates a federalism problem insofar as it undermines the sovereign authority of state and local governments as well as the state court system to take the appropriate administrative or legal action with respect to this purely local issue. Furthermore, the legislation proposes to ban any acquisition by eminent domain over property owned by a religious or non-profit organization. This ban would apply to even the most traditional public purposes, like a road or a school.

While proponents of this proposed legislation will undoubtedly invoke the Kelo decision to support its adoption, this bill does not adequately address, limit, alter, or affect the concerns raised in Kelo as a result of a local municipalities' use of its eminent domain powers. If this bill is passed, it will undermine the delicate balance that has been struck between the rights of private property owners and the rights of the public. Accordingly, we ask you to reject S. 3873.

Sincerely,

Mark H. Alcott

Memorandum of Opposition to the New York State Legislature
CONCURRENT RESOLUTION OF THE SENATE AND ASSEMBLY

proposing an amendment to section 7 of article 1 of the constitution, in relation to the taking of private property; and repealing section 7 of article 1 of the constitution relating to just compensation for taking private property

LAW AND SECTIONS REFERRED TO: Section 7 of article 1 of the constitution is REPEALED and a new section 7 of article 1 is added.

THE NEW YORK STATE BAR ASSOCIATION OPPOSES THIS LEGISLATION

The United States Supreme Court's decision in Kelo v City of New London, 125 S.Ct. 2655 (2005), which held that economic development is a valid public use for purposes of eminent domain, has generated extensive discussion and debate regarding the law of eminent domain. Hearings have been conducted by both houses of the New York State Legislature, and numerous bills have been introduced. The Association's Task Force on Eminent Domain has issued a report analyzing the law of eminent domain and the initiatives that have been proposed following the Kelo decision. The Task Force is comprised of experts in municipal law, private practitioners, and law school professors. That report, which has been approved by the House of Delegates (our Association's policymaking and governing body), concluded that the Kelo decision does not represent a revolutionary departure from existing law but, rather, represents the mainstream view with respect to both Federal and New York law regarding eminent domain. However, the reform of New York's laws on eminent domain would be appropriate, and the report sets forth issues that should be considered and addressed in before any "reform legislation" is signed into law.

* To view the report, go to the following page on the NYSBA web site: http://www.nysba.org/Eminent_Domain_Report_April_1_2006
The Association submits that an important first step to addressing any eminent domain reform is the establishment of a Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain. The Kelo decision and the publicity it engendered have focused attention on the complex legal, economic and constitutional issues surrounding eminent domain. Resolution of issues on topics such as defining public use, the appropriate level of judicial scrutiny, just compensation, and others, would best be accomplished through study by a variety of stakeholders to assure that all viewpoints are represented. A Temporary State Commission would help to meet that goal. Therefore, it is that position of the New York State Bar Association that no legislation restricting the purposes for which eminent domain may be exercised should be enacted pending the completion of such a study.

Accordingly, based on the foregoing, the Association opposes this legislation.

ELR News & Analysis: Eminent Domain Legislation Post-Ke-lo
A State of the States (Patty Salkin)
Eminent Domain Legislation Post-Kelo: A State of the States
by Patricia E. Salkin

Editors' Summary: In Kelo v. City of New London, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the use of eminent domain for economic development is a permissible "public use" under the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment. The decision proved controversial, as many feared that it would benefit large corporations at the expense of individual homeowners and local communities. Shortly thereafter, numerous states introduced legislation limiting the use of eminent domain. Below, Patricia Salkin surveys those state initiatives that have been signed into law following the Court's decision in Kelo.

I. Introduction

In the aftermath of the 2005 U.S. Supreme Court’s decision in Kelo v. City of New London,1 which held that economic development is a valid public purpose to satisfy the Fifth Amendment requirement that when government condemns private property it be for a public use, the U.S. Congress and state legislatures across the country quickly began to introduce legislative reforms to address the seemingly negative public response to the opinion.2 Approximately 600 bills were introduced in 43 states, although less than 100 bills actually made it to a vote in at least one chamber of a statehouse. Legislatures in 23 states passed 35 pieces of legislation that have been signed into law by their state governors, with governors in three states vetoing proposals perceived to be unduly restrictive.3 The new laws, or amendments to existing condemnation laws, include constitutional amendments, which in two states—Louisiana and South Carolina—will go before the voters in November. Also on the ballot for November 2006 are proposed eminent domain laws in Florida,4 Georgia,5 and South Carolina.6 In addition, three states passed proposals that simply condemn the Kelo decision outright, permitting exceptions allowing the transfer of such private property; and providing that this prohibition on the transfer of private property taken by eminent domain is applicable if the petition of taking that initiated the condemnation proceeding was filed on or after January 2, 2007.

3. Governors in Arizona, Iowa, and New Mexico vetoed legislation, but the Iowa Legislature overrode Gov. Tom Vilsack’s veto.
4. H.R.J. Res. 1569, ch. 2006-11, 2006 Leg., 108th Reg. Sess. (Fla. 2006), available at http://www.myfloridahouse.gov/Sections/Documents/loaddoc.aspx?FileName=_h1569enrt.doc&DocumentType=Bill&BillNumber=1569&Sessions=2006. The bill proposed an amendment to the Florida Constitution to prohibit the transfer of private property taken by eminent domain to a natural person or private entity; providing that the Legislature may, by general law, passed by a three-fifths vote of the membership of each house of the legislature, permit exceptions allowing the transfer of such private property; and providing that this prohibition on the transfer of private property taken by eminent domain is applicable if the petition of taking that initiated the condemnation proceeding was filed on or after January 2, 2007.
5. H.R. Res. 1306, Act 445, 148th Gen. Assem., 2005 to 2006 Reg. Sess., (Ga. 2005). This bill proposes an amendment to the constitution requiring that condemnation of property for redevelopment purposes be approved by vote of the elected governing authority of the county or city in which the property is located. The bill also restricts the use of eminent domain for redevelopment purposes to the elimination of affirmative harm, provides that the use of eminent domain by counties and municipalities be subject to limitation by general law, and prohibits the use of eminent domain by certain nonelected local authorities. For the full text of the bill, see Georgia General Assembly, http://www.legis.state.ga.us/legis/2005_06/sum/hr1306.htm (last visited Aug. 31, 2006).
6. S.J. Res. 1031, R453, 2005 to 2006 Gen. Assem., 116th Sess. (S.C. 2006). The language of the ballot initiative reads: Must Section 13, Article I of the Constitution of this State be amended so as to provide that except as otherwise provided in the Constitution, private property shall not be condemned by eminent domain for any purpose or benefit, including, but not limited to, the purpose or benefit of economic development, unless the condemnation is for public use; and to further provide that for the limited purpose of the remedy of blight, the General Assembly may provide by law that private property, if it meets certain conditions, may be condemned by eminent domain without the consent of the owner and put to a public use or private use if just compensation is first made for the property; and must Section 17, Article I of the Constitution of this State be amended to delete undesignated paragraphs that give slum clearance and redevelopment power to municipalities and housing or redevelopment authorities in Sumter and Cherokee Counties; and must the Constitution of this State be amended to delete Section 5, Article XIV, which provides slum clearance and redevelopment power over blighted properties to municipalities and housing or redevelopment authorities in Spartanburg, York, Florence, Greenville, Charleston, Richland, and Laurens Counties? For the full text of the bill, see South Carolina General Assembly http://www.scstatehouse.net/sess116_2005-2006/bills/1031.htm (last visited Sep. 29, 2006).
right. Task forces and study commissions were at work during the 2005 to 2006 legislative season, some appointed by governors and some established by legislation. Some of these task forces have already issued reports, and others are still at work.

This Article provides an overview of the state legislative activity post-Kelo with a limited focus on those initiatives that have been signed into law, rather than the more voluminous proposals that failed to garner significant legislative support to date.

II. Legislative Changes to Eminent Domain Laws 2005 to 2006

A review of the newly enacted laws can generally be organized into seven major categories:

- Proposals that prohibit the use of eminent domain for economic development purposes, including for the purpose of generating tax revenue, and legislation that prohibit the transfer of private property to another public entity;
- Proposals that define the phrase “public use”
- Efforts to restrict the exercise of eminent domain to blighted properties, including defining or redefining what constitutes blight;
- Laws to strengthen the procedural aspects of condemnation proceedings including the provision of greater public notice, more public hearings, requirements for good-faith negotiations with property owners and approval by elected legislative bodies of all proposed condemnations;
- Efforts to define “just compensation” as something greater than fair market value where the property to be condemned is a principal residence;
- Enactment of moratoria on the use of eminent domain for economic development purposes; and
- Establishment of legislative study commissions or task forces to study and report back to the legislature with findings and/or recommendations.

Even within each of these seven broad categories, states have enacted legislative initiatives designed to address unique issues and concerns of various interest groups in their respective jurisdictions. For example, states that are dependant upon agricultural production have passed new laws to add certain protections from the exercise of eminent domain involving farmland. In the area of just compensation, a number of new approaches are now offered, including increased compensation depending upon, in certain states, the underlying purpose of the condemnation, whether a house is involved in the condemnation, and how long the property has been in possession by the same family. Another policy area attracting legislative attention is the ability of landowners whose property has been condemned to repurchase it from the government at a later date if the government never used the land for the intended purpose when it was condemned. With roughly thirty three dozen new laws on the books, lawmakers and advocates in other states already have a wide range of options to evaluate when considering appropriate reforms in this area.

A. Prohibitions on the Use of Eminent Domain for Economic Development

As a direct result of the Kelo decision, a number of states have enacted laws that, while continuing to allow governments to exercise the power of eminent domain, prohibit governments from using it to accomplish economic development goals. This is not surprising since Justice John Paul Stevens practically invited legislation when he noted:

> We emphasize that nothing in our opinion precludes any State from placing further restrictions on its exercise of the takings power. Indeed, many States already impose “public use” requirements that are stricter than the federal baseline. Some of these requirements have been established as a matter of state constitutional law, while others are expressed in state eminent domain statutes that carefully limit the grounds upon which takings may be exercised. As the submissions of the parties and their amicus make clear, the necessity and wisdom of using eminent domain to promote economic development are certainly matters of legitimate public debate.

And public debate is certainly what has been occurring in legislatures across the country ever since.

A new law in Florida provides, in part, “that the prevention or elimination of a ‘slum area’ or ‘blighted area’ … and the preservation or enhancement of the tax base are not pub-

10. The phrase “public use” was at the core of the Kelo decision. The Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution states in part, “nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.” Whether economic development constitutes a valid “public use” or, a “public purpose” as the words have been interpreted to mean, continues to be the subject of public debate; while the Supreme Court determined that absent legislation otherwise, economic development purposes can satisfy the “public use” requirement.
11. In Kelo, the U.S. Supreme Court did not hold, as property rights advocates argued, that property must be found to be blighted before government could exercise its power of eminent domain.
12. Some of these issues were themes in the amicus curiae briefs submitted to the Supreme Court in the Kelo case.
13. Although a number of the amicus curiae briefs urged the Court to address the issue of just compensation, the Court declined to do so because the issue was not before it on appeal. Although the legislation that was enacted restricts additional compensation to situations involving primary residences, many other proposals that did not pass urged increased compensation whenever property was condemned for economic development.
14. In Kelo, Justice Stevens wrote:

> [P]etitioners urge us to adopt a new bright-line rule that economic development does not qualify as a public use. Putting aside the unpersuasive suggestion that the City’s plan will provide only purely economic benefits, neither precedent nor logic supports petitioners’ proposal. Promoting economic development is a traditional and long accepted function of government. There is, moreover, no principled way of distinguishing economic development from the other public purposes that we have recognized.

lic uses or purposes for which private property may be taken by eminent domain. 16 Where property is located in a community redevelopment area, and after a redevelopment plan is adopted, a parcel may only be condemned where the current condition of the property poses an existing threat to the public health or safety and the threat is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain. 17 The Florida law now provides, in part, that where property is acquired by condemnation, it “may not be conveyed by the condemning authority to any person or private entity,” except for use by a common carrier, for a road or other right-of-way, for public or private utilities, for public infrastructure, or where the use is incidental to the use as public property or facility for the purpose of providing goods or services to the public. 18

In Idaho, recent changes to the state's eminent domain law include a new section limiting eminent domain for private parties, urban renewal, or economic development purposes. The amended law specifically provides that eminent domain may not be used to acquire private property “for any alleged public use which is merely a pretext for the transfer of the condemned property or any interest in that property to a private party; or . . . for the purpose of promoting or effectuating economic development . . .” except where the property is dilapidated or poses a public health or safety risk. 19

The Nebraska Legislature also adopted language prohibiting the use of eminent domain for economic development purposes. It defines “economic development purpose” as “taking property for subsequent use by a commercial for-profit enterprise or to increase tax revenue, tax base, employment, or general economic conditions.”20 Exempted from this restriction are projects for rights-of-ways, aqueducts, pipelines, utilities, railroads, removal of uses that cause an immediate threat to public health and safety, the leasing of property to a private person where the use is incidental to the public property or public facility, acquisition of abandoned property, clearing defective title, or a finding of blight under the community development law. 21

In Kentucky, a new law prohibits the “condemnation of private property for transfer to a private owner for the purpose of economic development that benefits the general public only indirectly, such as by increasing the tax base, tax revenues, employment, or by promoting the general economic health of the community.”22 The law defines “public use” to include the ownership or possession of the property by a governmental entity; acquisition and transfer of property for purposes of eliminating blighted, slum, or substandard areas; and uses by public utilities or common carriers. 23

In Kansas, effective July 1, 2007, condemnation for the purpose of “selling, leasing, or otherwise transferring such property to any private entity is prohibited . . .” unless the property is needed by the state or a municipality for rights-of-way for public roads, bridges, or public improvement projects, which includes public buildings, parks, recreation facilities, water supply projects, wastewater and waste disposal projects, stormwater projects, and flood control and drainage projects. 24

Similarly, the law in Alaska was amended to prohibit the use of eminent domain “to acquire private property from a private person for the purpose of transferring title to the property to another private person for economic development purposes.”25 Furthermore, the law restricts the use of eminent domain for developing a recreational facility or project if the property to be acquired includes a personal residence or is within 250 linear feet of a personal residence. 26 However, the Alaska law does allow a municipality to exercise eminent domain and to transfer title to the property to a private person for economic development where:

(1) the municipality does not delegate the power of eminent domain to another person;
(2) before issuing notice in (3) of this subsection, the municipality makes a good faith effort to negotiate the purchase of the property;
(3) written notice is provided at least 90 days before the public hearing to each owner of land that may be affected by the exercise of eminent domain;
(4) the municipality holds a public hearing on the exercise of eminent domain after adequate public notice; and
(5) the governing body of the municipality approves the exercise of eminent domain by a two-thirds majority vote . . . 27

A new law in Tennessee provides that the “power of eminent domain shall be used sparingly and that laws permitting the use of eminent domain shall be narrowly construed so as not to enlarge by inference or inadvertently the power of eminent domain.”28 The statute provides that the definition of public use “shall not include either private use or benefit or the indirect public benefits resulting from private economic development and private commercial enterprise, including increased tax revenue and increased employment opportunity,” except where an acquisition is needed by a public or private utility or common carrier, a housing authority or community development agency specifically to remove blight, where the public use is “merely incidental to a public use, so long as no land use condemned or taken solely for the purpose of conveying or permitting such incidental private use,” or where the acquisition is by a municipality for an industrial park.29 Similarly, a new Pennsylvania law prohibits eminent domain for private enterprises unless it occupies an incidental area within the public project, “such as retail space, office space, restaurant and food service facility or similar incidental area.”

In Vermont, the statutes were amended to prohibit the use of eminent domain where the taking “confers a private benefit on a particular private party; or is primarily for the purposes of economic development.” In West Virginia, eminent domain may not be used to condemn property for “[p]rivate retail, office, commercial, industrial or residential development; or for the enhancement of tax revenue.” Nor may the state “purchase property for a purpose that results in a transfer in fee of the property to a person, nongovernmental entity, corporation or other business entity to fulfill the purpose of the use of the eminent domain.”

The new South Dakota law prohibits the acquisition of property by use of eminent domain “for transfer to any private person, nongovernmental entity, or other public-private business entity”; or for the primary purpose of enhancing tax revenue.

Under a new law in Missouri, private property may not be acquired through the process of eminent domain solely for economic development purposes. The law restricts the use of eminent domain to governmental bodies or agencies whose governing body is elected or appointed by elected officials or for urban redevelopment corporations operating pursuant to an agreement with a municipality.

A new provision was enacted in Colorado. Under a new law in Missouri, private property may not be acquired through the process of eminent domain solely for economic development purposes. The law restricts the use of eminent domain to governmental bodies or agencies whose governing body is elected or appointed by elected officials or for urban redevelopment corporations operating pursuant to an agreement with a municipality. Private utilities and common carriers are exempted from this restriction. And in Maine, eminent domain may not be used to condemn agricultural, fishing, or forest land or land improved with homes or buildings “[f]or the purposes of private retail, office, commercial, industrial or residential development; . . . for the enhancement of tax revenue; or . . . [f]or transfer to an individual or a for-profit entity.”

These states that have voluntary restricted themselves and other governmental entities in their jurisdictions from exercising eminent domain for economic purposes may find that while they “won” short-term public approval following the media frenzy about the Kelo decision, these states may experience longer-term difficulties competing for economic development projects in neighboring states. Furthermore, a number of the definitions offered for economic development are so detailed that it is possible that courts will interpret them to be so broad-sweeping to effectively eliminate the exercise of eminent domain for purposes perhaps not contemplated by the new laws. For example, where property is condemned to widen roads and/or install sidewalks adjacent to business or retail areas, it is possible that displeased property owners could argue an underlying economic development benefit or purpose motivated such action. While this is likely not the intended result of these new laws, it may be the future effect.

B. Definitions of Public Use

A new Georgia law provides that “public use” includes land that is owned, occupied, or used by the general public or by the state or a local government entity; is needed for the creation or functioning of public utilities; is necessary for roads for trade or travel; is needed to clear clouded title; is needed to clear “blight” or for the acquisition of a public benefit (including increased tax revenues and increased employment opportunities) as a “public use.” A new Indiana law contains similar language.

As in Georgia, the New Hampshire law specifically does not include the public benefits resulting from private economic development and private commercial enterprise, including increased tax revenues and increased employment opportunities” as a “public use.” A new Indiana law contains similar language.

The term “public use” is defined in the new Indiana law to mean the:

1. possession, occupation, and enjoyment of a parcel of real property by the general public or a public agency for the purpose of providing the general public with fundamental services, including the construction, maintenance, and reconstruction of highways, bridges, airports, ports, certified technology parks, intermodal facilities, and parks;
2. leasing of highway, bridge, airport, port certified technology park, intermodal facility, or park by a public agency that retains ownership of the parcel by written lease with right of forfeiture; or

A newly enacted New Hampshire law defines “public use” as:

(a) (1) The possession, occupation, and enjoyment of real property by the general public or governmental entities;
    (2) The acquisition of any interest in real property necessary to the function of a public or private utility or common carrier either through deed of sale or lease;
    (3) The acquisition of real property to remove “blight”;
    (4) Private use that is incidental to public use.

As in Georgia, the New Hampshire law specifically does not include the public benefits resulting from private economic development and private commercial enterprise, including increased tax revenues and increased employment opportunities” as a “public use.”

The term “public use” is defined in the new Indiana law to mean the:

1. possession, occupation, and enjoyment of a parcel of real property by the general public or a public agency for the purpose of providing the general public with fundamental services, including the construction, maintenance, and reconstruction of highways, bridges, airports, ports, certified technology parks, intermodal facilities, and parks;
2. leasing of highway, bridge, airport, port certified technology park, intermodal facility, or park by a public agency that retains ownership of the parcel by written lease with right of forfeiture; or

A newly enacted New Hampshire law defines “public use” as:

(a) (1) The possession, occupation, and enjoyment of real property by the general public or governmental entities;
    (2) The acquisition of any interest in real property necessary to the function of a public or private utility or common carrier either through deed of sale or lease;
    (3) The acquisition of real property to remove “blight”;
    (4) Private use that is incidental to public use.
(3) use of a parcel of real property to create or operate a public utility, an energy utility . . . or a pipeline company. 44

In Minnesota, a new law provides that the public benefits of economic development do not “by themselves constitute a public use or public purpose,” 45 leaving the door open that condemnation would not be outright prohibited if other public benefits in addition to economic prosperity result from a project.

C. Factoring in Blight

The controversial issue of whether a finding of blight is required prior to exercising eminent domain for redevelopment projects, absent a statutory mandate, was also resolved in Kelo, with Justice Stevens noting that blight was not a consideration in New London and that regardless, the city’s determination that the area was sufficiently distressed to justify the condemnations was entitled to judicial deference. 46 Since then, public debate has centered on whether it is reasonable for governments to condemn entire parcels of property for any, or certain types of projects, absent a finding of blight. It also follows that absent a clear definition of “blight,” what seems blighted to one person may be perfectly acceptable to another.

In Alabama, a new law prohibits the use of eminent domain to take non-blighted properties in a redevelopment project unless the property owner consents. 47 The law adds a detailed definition of “blighted property,” which includes:

1. The presence of structures, buildings, or improvements, which, because of dilapidation, deterioration, or unsanitary or unsafe conditions, vacancy or abandonment, neglect or lack of maintenance, inadequate provisions for ventilation, light, air, sanitation, vermin infestation, or lack of necessary facilities and equipment, are unfit for human habitation or occupancy.

2. The existence of high density of population and overcrowding or the existence of structures which are fire hazards or are otherwise dangerous to the safety of persons or property or any combination of the factors.

3. The presence of a substantial number of properties having defective or unusual conditions of title which make the free transfer or alienation of the properties unlikely or impossible.

4. The presence of structures from which the utilities, plumbing, heating, sewerage, or other facilities have been disconnected, destroyed, removed, or rendered ineffective so that the property is unfit for its intended use.

5. The presence of excessive vacant land on which structures were previously located which, by reason of neglect or lack of maintenance, has become overgrown with noxious weeds, is a place for accumulation of trash and debris, or a haven for mosquitoes, rodents, or other vermin where the owner refuses to remedy the problem after notice by the appropriate governing body.

6. The presence of property which, because of physical condition, use, or occupancy, constitutes a public nuisance or attractive nuisance where the owner refuses to remedy the problem after notice by the appropriate governing body.

7. The presence of property with code violations affecting health or safety that has not been substantially rehabilitated within the time periods required by the applicable codes.

8. The presence of property that has tax delinquencies exceeding the value of the property.

9. The presence of property which, by reason of environmental contamination, poses a threat to public health or safety in its present condition. 48

Blight is defined in a recently enacted New Hampshire law as “structures beyond repair, public nuisances, structures unfit for human habitation or use, and abandoned property.” 49 In Minnesota, a “blighted area” is one that is zoned for and used for urban use and where more than 50% of its buildings are dilapidated. 50

In Georgia, a new law requires that blighted property must contain two or more of the following conditions: uninhabitable, unsafe, or abandoned structures; property that has inadequate ventilation, light, air, or sanitation; property that causes imminent harm to life or other property caused by natural disaster (where the governor has declared a state of emergency); Superfund sites; the occurrence of repeated illegal activity on the site; or property that is maintained below code standards for more than one year after the owner was given notice of the violations. 51

A new law in Florida takes a somewhat different approach, providing that a parcel of real property may be condemned only where “the current condition of the property poses an existing threat to public health or public safety and the existing threat to public health or public safety is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain.” 52 In Idaho, instead of the term “blight,” the law refers to deteriorated or deteriorating properties in competitively disadvantaged areas. A property will be deemed as such if:

1. The property, due to general dilapidation, compromised structural integrity, or failed mechanical systems, endangers life or endangers property by fire or by other perils that pose an actual identifiable threat to building occupants; and

2. The property contains specifically identifiable conditions that pose an actual risk to human health, transmission of disease, juvenile delinquency or criminal content; and

3. The property presents an actual risk of harm to the public health, safety, morals or general welfare. 53

Similarly, the new law in Indiana does not use the term “blight.” Instead, it limits the ability of governments to exercise eminent domain powers unless the parcel is a public nuisance; unfit for human habitation; is structurally unfit or unsound for its intended use; is located in a substantially developed neighborhood and is vacant or unimproved or presents problems due to neglect or lack of maintenance; is subject to tax delinquencies; contains environmental contamination.

nation; or has been abandoned. In addition, the condemnation must do more than just increase the property tax base of the governing entity.

A new law in Pennsylvania offers detailed definitions of blighted property for single units and multiple units of property, focusing on characteristics that are typically detrimental to public health, safety, and welfare, such as public nuisances; attractive nuisances; vacant, abandoned, and tax delinquent properties; and properties in violation of building codes.

A Wisconsin initiative added the following definition of "blighted property" to its statute:

[A]ny property that, by reason of abandonment, dilapidation, deterioration, age or obsolescence, inadequate provisions for ventilation, light, air, or sanitation, high density of population and overcrowding, faulty lot layout in relation to size, adequacy, accessibility, or usefulness, unsanitary or unsafe conditions, deterioration of site or other improvements, or the existence of conditions that endanger life or property by fire or other causes, or any combination of such factors, is detrimental to the public health, safety, or welfare. Property that consists of only one dwelling unit is not blighted property unless, in addition, at least one of the following applies:

1. The property is not occupied by the owner of the property, his or her spouse, or an individual related to the owner by blood, marriage, or adoption within the 4th degree of kinship...
2. The crime rate in, on, or adjacent to the property is at least 3 times the crime rate in the remainder of the municipality in which the property is located.

In addition, as state legislatures began to examine the issue of blight, the agricultural lobby expressed concerns and fears that older farm buildings and structures could be considered blighted, providing an opening for governments to condemn agricultural lands that might be put to a higher economic use. As a result, a number of initiatives contain language that specifically exempts certain agricultural lands from the definition of blight. For example, Idaho revised its definition of deteriorated or deteriorating area, described above, to ensure that an agricultural operation will not be deemed as such. The state law also provides that a viable agricultural operational will not be taken by eminent domain unless the operation has not been in use for three consecutive years. Similarly, the new Tennessee law provides that "under no circumstances shall land used predominantly in the production of agriculture . . . be considered a blighted area." Nebraska law contains a similar caveat, as does Missouri's.

D. Other Restrictions on the Use of Eminent Domain

A number of restrictions or limitations on the exercise of eminent domain have also been the subject of legislative change. These range from temporary measures, such as moratoria, to prohibitions on the ability of private interests to pressure governments to use their powers to condemn property for the purpose of transferring title or a lease interest to the private entity.

1. Moratorium on the Use of Eminent Domain

In California, a moratorium has been enacted until January 1, 2008, to prohibit the exercise of eminent domain to acquire owner-occupied residential real property where the owner would be displaced if the ownership is transferred to a private party or entity. A moratorium was also enacted in Ohio preventing the state and its political subdivisions from using eminent domain powers to take, “without the owner’s consent, private property that is in an unblighted area when the primary purpose for the taking is economic development that will ultimately result in ownership of the property being vested in another private person . . .” until December 31, 2006. During both the moratoria periods in California and Ohio, legislative study commissions are examining myriad eminent domain issues.

2. No Pass-Through

“Pass-through” refers to governments that use their eminent domain powers to obtain property and then sell it to a private entity. To curtail this phenomenon, the Montana legislature attempted to pass a law that would have required a municipality to wait 10 years before it could sell or provide property that it obtained through eminent domain to a private entity.

3. Notice to Property Owners

In Wisconsin, prior to commencing an authorized condemnation where the condemnor intends to convey or lease the property to a private entity, written findings that require the following must be made and presented to the owner of the property:

1. The scope of the redevelopment project encompassing the owner’s property.
2. A legal description of the redevelopment area that includes the owner’s property.
3. The purpose of the condemnation.
4. A finding that the owner’s property is blighted and the reasons for that finding.

Before condemnation may take place within a redevelopment area, Florida law requires 30-day advance notice of a public hearing, via first class mail, to each real property owner whose property may be included in the condemned area, including business owners and lessees who operate businesses in the proposed redevelopment area.\footnote{66. H.B. 1567, ch. 2006-11, 2006 Leg., 108th Reg. Sess. (Fla. 2006).} The law also lays out the content of the notice, including the fact that private-to-private transfers may occur; a geographic location map of the area; dates, times, and locations of public hearings where the resolution of a finding of blight may be considered; how parties may receive more information; and how parties may appear at the hearings.\footnote{67. Id. In addition, the law provides that the public hearings must be generally advertised at least twice, that at least one hearing must be held after 5 P.M. on a weekday (unless changed by a supermajority vote of the governing body), the minimum size of the type is also prescribed for the public notice.} For condemnations in redevelopment areas, the new Missouri law requires the proper and timely notice to all displaced persons and raises the dollar thresholds for relocation payments for both individuals and for businesses.\footnote{68. Id.} In addition, the law requires the written notice to include: an identification of the property; the purpose for which it is being condemned; and a statement that the property owner has a right to seek legal counsel, engage in negotiations, have "just compensation determined preliminarily by court-appointed condemnation commissioners and, ultimately, by a jury," contest the condemnation, and "[e]xercise the rights to request vacation of an easement under the procedures and circumstances provided for..."\footnote{69. The law also creates an office of ombudsman for property rights to assist citizens, and property owners must be notified that they may seek their assistance.} The law also provides that the public hearings must be generally advertised at least twice, that at least one hearing must be held after 5 P.M. on a weekday (unless changed by a supermajority vote of the governing body), the minimum size of the type is also prescribed for the public notice.\footnote{70. Id.}

Utah’s eminent domain statute was amended to provide that prior to the exercise of eminent domain by a municipality, the legislative body must approve the taking.\footnote{71. S.B. 117, 57th Leg., 2006 Gen. Sess. (Utah 2006).} Furthermore, prior to taking a final vote by the legislative body, each owner of property subject to condemnation must be given written notice of the public meeting of the legislative body at which a vote on the proposed taking is expected to occur, and the legislative body must allow the property owner an opportunity to be heard.\footnote{72. Id.}

In Oregon, the condemnor must make an initial written offer to the owner of the property at least 40 days before the filing of any action. This offer must also contain a written appraisal that can only be altered if there was a mistake in material fact.\footnote{73. H.B. 2268, ch. 433, 73d Leg. Assem., 2005 Sess. (Or. 2005).}

4. Return of Property to Owners at Time of Condemnation

In West Virginia, if the condemning party does not use condemned property for the purposes for which it was condemned or for some other public use within 10 years, the property must be offered for resale to the person from whom it was condemned at the price that was originally paid at the time of the condemnation.\footnote{74. H.B. 4048, ch. 96, 80th Leg., Reg. Sess. (W. Va. 2006). The law further provides that the right of repurchase shall expire in 90 days following receipt of notice of the right to repurchase.}

The Georgia law provides that condemnations shall not be converted to a use other than a public use for a period of 20 years from the initial condemnation, and where the condemned property is not put to public use within five years, the former property owner may seek a reconveyance of the property, a quitclaim of the property, or additional compensation.\footnote{75. H.R. Res. 1313, Act 444, 148th Gen. Assem., 2005 to 2006 Reg. Sess., (Ga. 2005). The law contains a detailed process to effectuate a reconveyance.}

Similarly, the Iowa law provides that if the condemning agency seeks to dispose of real property within five years of its acquisition, it must first offer the property for sale to the prior owner at the current fair market value or at the fair market value of the property at the time it was acquired plus any incurred cleanup costs, whichever is less.\footnote{76. H. File 2351, 81st Gen. Assem., 1st Sess. (Iowa 2005). For the full text of the bill, see http://www.legis.state.ia.us/aspzx/Cool-ICE/Enrolled.htm (last visited Sept. 1, 2006).} The prior owner then has 180 days to purchase back the property.\footnote{77. Id.}

And while there is no reverter clause in the new Florida law, the law prohibits a condemning entity or other governmental entity from conveying the condemned property to a natural person or private entity for at least five years after acquiring title to the property.\footnote{78. H.B. 1567, ch. 2006-11, 2006 Leg., 108th Reg. Sess. (Fla. 2006).}

E. Compensation

Exactly what constitutes “just compensation” under the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution is another hot-button issue under active debate and study. While a number of amicus curiae briefs to the Supreme Court in the Kelo case asked the Court to address this issue, the Court understandably chose not to do so since this issue was not clearly before the Court.\footnote{79. See Patricia E. Salkin et al., The Friends of the Court: The Role of Amicus Curiae in Kelo v. City of New London, in Dwight H. Merriam and Mary Massaron Ross, Eminent Domain Use and Abuse: Kelo in Context 165 (ABA Press 2006).} State legislatures have not been shy about venturing into the compensation debate; however, caution is appropriate as some of the new laws may not withstand future constitutional challenge as they may be seen as violating gifting prohibitions in state constitutions.

The new Tennessee law provides that governmental entities who seek to dispose of, sell, lease, or otherwise transfer condemned property to another public or quasi-public entity or to a private person, corporation, or other person must receive “at least fair market value for such land.”\footnote{80. S.B. 3296, ch. 863, 104th Gen. Assem., 2005 Sess. (Tenn. 2005).} The Kansas law provides that, “[i]f the legislature authorizes eminent domain for private economic development purposes, the legislature shall consider requiring compensation of at least 200% of fair market value to property owners.”\footnote{81. S.B. 323, 81st Leg., 2005 Reg. Sess. (Kan. 2005) (signed May 18, 2006).}
cern is not duplicated in the compensation otherwise awarded to the owner.83

In Indiana, the new law provides that where agricultural land is condemned, the owner is entitled to either 125% of fair market value or, upon the request of the owner and where the owner and the condemnor agree, a transfer of an ownership interest in agricultural land that is equal in acreage to the condemned parcel.84 In addition, the owner is entitled to payment for any other damages or losses incurred in trade or business attributable to the condemnation and for any relocation costs.85 Where the property to be condemned is a residence, the Indiana law provides that compensation is to be 150% of the fair market value, plus any additional damages and losses incurred attributable to the condemnation and any relocation costs.86

A newly enacted law in Missouri offers three alternative methods for computing just compensation. The method yielding the highest compensation, as applicable to the particular type of property, is the one that should be used.87 The options are: (1) fair market value; (2) where a homestead is to be condemned, an amount equal to 125% of fair market value; and (3) where the condemnation involves property that has been in the same family for 50 or more years, fair market value plus heritage value, which is defined as 50% of fair market value.88 Where the property owner is dissatisfied with an award determination made by appointed commissioners, the owner is entitled to a jury trial.89

In Iowa, offers of compensation must be at least for fair market value, and the acquiring agency is authorized to offer an amount equal to 130% of fair market value appraisal plus expenses.90 But once an owner has accepted an offer for 130% of fair market value, they are barred from claiming payment for other expenses.

The Georgia law authorizes the appointment of a special master to determine issues of compensation. Where the property owner is still dissatisfied with the condemnation award, they will have a right to a jury trial.91 An Indiana law requires, among other things, good-faith negotiations with the property owner, including providing the property owner with an appraisal or other evidence used to establish the proposed purchase price.92 The Missouri law also requires good-faith negotiations and contains a statutory description of what constitutes “good-faith negotiations.”93

F. Other Procedural Safeguards

Several state laws provide property owners with additional procedural safeguards during the condemnation proceedings. In Minnesota, for example, appraisals must be made available to the property owner at least five days before the hearing, and prior to the commencement of an eminent domain proceeding, the local government must hold a public hearing upon written notice to each property owner whose property may be taken.94 In addition, public notice must be made at least 30 but no more than 60 days in advance, and interested persons must be allowed “reasonable time to present relevant testimony” at the hearing.95 Following the public hearing, and after at least 30 days, the local government is required to vote on whether to authorize the local government or agency to use eminent domain to acquire the property.96 Where a court determines that the condemnation was not for a public purpose or was unlawful, the court must award the property owner reasonable attorney fees and other related expenses.97 Attorneys fees are also available under the Missouri law98 as well as under the new Indiana law.

In Indiana, a mediation process has been put into effect requiring the court to appoint a mediator within 10 days of a property owner’s mediation request.99 The mediation must explore reasonable alternatives to the exercise of eminent domain, must take place within 90 days of the appointment of the mediator, and the condemnor is responsible for paying the costs of the mediator.100 In addition, the Indiana law contains provisions for settlement offers and, where there is a trial, the condemnor must pay for the owner’s litigation expenses, including reasonable attorneys fees, up to 25% of the cost of the acquisition.101

The Florida Legislature has left it to the circuit courts to determine whether the public purpose of the condemnation is valid, i.e., whether an existing threat to public health or safety is likely to continue absent the use of eminent domain, and whether such condemnation is necessary to eliminate it.102 In addition, the court must make this determination without attaching the typical deference afforded to decisions of legislative bodies.103

G. Study Commissions/Task Forces

A number of states have opted to create study commissions or task forces to examine more closely the types of eminent domain reforms that may be appropriate in their jurisdiction. Perhaps the New York State Bar Association’s Task Force on Eminent Domain best articulated the need for reasoned study when, upon evaluating the various legislative proposals in New York (of which there were close to 20), the Task Force realized that little state-specific research and data exists to accurately assess both the need for, and impact of, many of the proposed reforms.104 The Task Force urged, among other things, that the state legislature begin the collection and analysis of this data before deciding on appropriate substantive modifications to the law. What follows is a list of questions that the Task Force suggested should be answered through empirical research:

- How is eminent domain used in the State?
- How many times each month or each year is a condemnation proceeding instituted?
- How many times is eminent domain used for roads, highways, bridges, sidewalks, schools, government buildings and sewers (among other things)?
- How many times does the use of eminent domain result in the loss of a home?
- How many times does the use of eminent domain result in the loss of a business?
- How many times is eminent domain used for economic development?
- Of the number of times eminent domain is used for economic development in New York, what are the results of the proposed projects? Are they successful? How is success to be benchmarked?
- Is the use of eminent domain more prevalent in upstate or downstate? Is it used more often in urban, suburban or rural areas?
- How often is eminent domain used in New York by the federal government, the state government, local governments, other public benefit corporations? Is it used by agencies with land use and planning oversight or agencies whose portfolio is only economic development?
- Has the use of [e]minent [d]omain increased dramatically, as is implied by some? If so, what is responsible for that increase?
- How often do we use public-private partnerships to effectuate eminent domain for redevelopment projects in New York?
- To what extent are the so-labeled “private” transfers for matters such as industrial development that are essentially public/private partnerships?
- How many times is eminent domain not needed because there were willing sellers to enable projects to be completed?
- What efforts are made by government and developers to reach private agreements with property owners?
- Are there financial differences between property owners who settle quickly and those who do not?
- How many times are condemnations challenged based on the final compensation offer? What is the outcome of these court cases? How many times does a court award increased compensation to property owners?
- What compensation is being paid, and how does that compensation relate to market value, to costs such as relocation costs, and to subjective values, such as the nature of the planned projects?
- How many instances of abuse exist in New York State over a defined period of time (and how should “abuse” be defined)?
- Is there any information about redevelopment projects that involved the use of eminent domain and those that did not to determine whether they were equally successful? What have been the social costs and benefits of such efforts?105

While not a legislative task force, the Task Force also recommended the following:

- The use of eminent domain should not be restricted to specified public projects.
- Local governments should not have a veto over exercises of eminent domain by public authorities of larger entities within their borders.
- Agencies exercising eminent domain for economic development purposes should be required to prepare a comprehensive economic development plan and a property owner impact assessment.
- The present 30-day statute of limitations in [Eminent Domain Procedure Law (EDPL)] §207 for judicial review of the condemnor’s determination and findings should be expanded.
- A new public hearing under EDPL §201 should be required where there has been substantial change in the scope of a proposed economic development project involving the exercise of eminent domain.
- No exceptions to the EDPL are necessary for acquiring property for public utility purposes.
- Acquisitions should not be exempted from the EDPL’s eminent domain procedures simply because other statutes provide for land-use review.
- A Temporary State Commission on Eminent Domain should be established.106

The California Legislature directed the California Law Revision Commission to study the appraisal and valuation process in eminent domain proceedings with respect to fairness of compensation and the role of legal counsel for the condemnee and to report its findings to the legislature, including recommendations for change, by January 1, 2008.107 In addition, on or before January 1, 2007, the California Research Bureau must submit a report to the legislature that includes, but is not limited to the following:

1. All exercises of the power of eminent domain by public entities to acquire residential property for private use completed between January 1, 1998, and January 1, 2003, or later if the information is available. This information shall be separable according to whether residential property is owner-occupied or not owner occupied.
2. The declared purposes for each of those acquisitions.
3. The initial offer of just compensation for each of those acquisitions.
4. The final offer of just compensation for each of those acquisitions.
5. The total compensation paid for each of those acquisitions, including the acquisition price and relocation payments.
6. The current owners of those real properties.
7. The current uses of those real properties.108

In New Hampshire, a Special House Committee to Study Eminent Domain Issues recommended, among other things, that a Joint Legislative Committee be created to study in depth:

- What guidelines must a taking authority follow before a taking is appropriate?
- Should a public hearing be required in all instances of a contemplated eminent domain taking? If so, where in the statutes should a hearing requirement be codified?
- What should the criteria be to establish the proper balance between the probable benefit of an economic development project to a community through the eminent domain process, and the probable harm to the concept of the sanctity of private property?
- Do state statutes relating to eminent domain need to be consolidated [...]?
- Should we consider the award of enhanced compensation; that is, payment in excess of fair market value, for property taken by eminent domain?
- Should the terms “public good” and “incidental benefit to the public,” which have increasingly appeared in feasibility studies and court decisions in which the exercise of the power of eminent domain has been considered, be precisely defined by statute?
- Should the term “blighted,” and derivative and related terms, be explicitly defined by statute in the context of eminent domain when dealing with so-called “urban renewal” and “redevelopment” projects?
- Should the proposed [language of §498-A:2 of the Revised Statutes Annotated] “the acquisition of land to cure a concrete harmful effect of its present use, including the removal of public nuisances or structures that are beyond repair or that are unfit for human habitation or use; or the acquisition of abandoned property,” be included when defining “blight?” Should, and if so, how should appraisals and other similar measures be used to determine “blight?”
- Should land taken by eminent domain always be offered for resale first to the owner from whom it was taken, if the purpose for the taking is not fulfilled within a set timeframe? [...]?
- Should attorney’s fees be awarded to property owners who either successfully challenge an eminent domain taking, or who secure a damages award higher than the initial offer made by the taking authority?
- Should a permanent legislative commission be established whose sole purpose and function would be to review and make recommendations to the full [U.S.] Senate and [U.S.] House of Representatives concerning any proposed eminent domain taking whose objective is economic development or enhancement of the tax base, or where it is contemplated that the property taken, or any portion of it, would be transferred, whether or not for value, to a private person or entity? If so, what criteria should this commission apply in its consideration of such a proposed taking, and how should it interface with the Board of Tax and Land Appeals in order to avoid duplication of effort?
- Does the limited scope of our proposed definition of public use in any way unduly burden communities in greatest need of economic development?

- Should legislation authorizing and establishing the scope of the exercise of the power of eminent domain by a Housing Authority be passed?

Study commissions are still at work in Ohio and Tennessee. Other reports have been issued by the New Jersey Department of the Public Advocate, the Missouri Eminent Domain Task Force, and the Indiana Interim Study Committee on Eminent Domain. Meanwhile, legislators in North Carolina and Oklahoma have formed internal study committees to explore eminent domain issues.

III. Conclusion

While a number of new laws were enacted in 2005 to 2006 in the aftermath of the Kelo decision, more legislative reforms are likely in 2007 with more task forces reporting and more courts applying (or not) the holding in Kelo to situations in communities across the country. Advocates on all sides of the issue need to engage in serious dialogue about how to best ensure fairness in the process and about the appropriate and desired roles of government in the area of economic development. The bottom line: states that have been quick to ban the use of eminent domain for economic development purposes will need to come up with creative economic development tools; otherwise, states that have resisted pressures for legislative reform will benefit from greater economic development activity. This, of course, is not the only issue, nor perhaps the most important issue to consider, when debating eminent domain reform. Process issues and the relationship between government and the people should remain the focus of future reform initiatives.

Eminent Domain Summit
State Bar Center
October 24, 2006
Agenda

10:30 a.m. Welcome
10:40 a.m. Introductions / Ground Rules
11:00 a.m. Session #1—Due Process Issues

A. Notice

1. Regarding pre-taking hearings and determinations, should the EDPL be amended to change the:
   a) type of notice
   b) time for notice, and;
   c) sufficiency of notice?

2. Regarding filing claims, should the EDPL be amended to change the:
   a) type of notice;
   b) time for notice;
   c) sufficiency of notice;
   d) statutes of limitation;
   e) suspension of interest;
   f) deposits;
   g) advance payments; and
   h) time to file claims?
B. Court Procedures
   1. Should the EDPL be amended to allow for expedited review of pre-taking determinations in Court?
   2. Should the EDPL be amended to allow for expedited trials concerning just compensation?

Noon  Session #2—Just Compensation Issues

A. Should the EDPL be amended to entitle property owners to more than fair market value in some or all cases?

Should the EDPL be amended to compensate for loss of business damages? Good will?

How should the appropriate rate of interest on awards be determined?

Should the EDPL be amended to allow the advance payment to the claimant at the time of taking?

1:00 p.m. Break for Lunch

1:30 p.m.  Session #3—Other Procedural Issues

Should the time for filing claims be uniform?

Should the timeframe for motions under § 702(B) be clarified; if so, how?

C. Should pretrial discovery be expanded, expressly permitted or conditioned by statute?

D. Should expert witness reports be discoverable?

E. Should the grounds for § 207 opposition to a taking be modified or expanded? If so, how? Should opposition to the taking be permitted on the return day of the petition?

F. Should both the State and non-State condemnsors obtain Court review and Court permission to file a taking map?

2:30 p.m. Break
2:45 p.m.  Session #4—Other Related Issues

A. Should the State create an Eminent Domain Study Commission?

B. Should copies of all contingent fee retainer agreements in condemnation cases be filed with OCA?

C. Should other studies about eminent domain be conducted?

D. Should pre-vesting and post-vesting discovery of fixture claims be modified?
